Sascha Jacobsen, violinist, will take the classes of the late Franz Kneisel at the Institute of Musical Art for the remainder of the season. Mr. Jacobsen was graduated from the institute in 1914, and received the Artist's Diploma in 1915. Since that time he has been on the concert stage.

Albert Janpolski's setting of Longfellow's poem "The Singers" is a simple and practicable score that lies well for the voices. The East Orange Community Chorus of 300 voices sang it April 5; Marshall Field's chorus at Chicago is now rehearsing it. Mr. Janpolski is arranging "The Singer" for solo voice.

Julius Mattfeld of the New York Public Library, Music Division, has transferred his activities to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. He will serve as music librarian at the radio broadcasting station WEAF, 195 Broadway, New York.

Laura Williams, who gives a program of Arabic folk songs at Chickering Hall next Friday evening, went to Algiers and later to Tunis, where Baron Rudolf Erlanger placed his collection at her disposal. Miss Williams devoted two years to their study and has brought back a repertory of songs that have come down from time immemorial.

The Women's University Glee Club, directed by Gerald Reynolds, will give its third annual Spring concert at the Engineers' Club on Monday evening, April 19. The program will include three types of English songs from seventeenth century airs to English folk songs and modern English songs, as well as a first American production of Andre Caplet's "Le Miroir de Jesus," the French composer's last work before his death.

Melchiorre Mauro-Cottone, chief organist of the Capitol Theatre, has received notification from the Italian Consul General that he has been decorated with the Cross of Chevalier of the Crown of Italy. Dr. Cottone's assistant, Carl McKinley, has also been honored by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, which performed his composition, "The Blue Flower."

The April issue of the quarterly magazine, "Modern Music," published by the League of Composers, concerns itself chiefly with the younger composers and new movements. Aaron Copland, himself a young American composer, makes a study of seventeen young Americans. Adolpho Salazar, one of the best-known composers of Spain today, writes on new musical forces in his country. Alfred Eisenstein, the critic, contributes a study of Paul Hindemith. The Viennese composer, Paul Pisk, has written an article on "The End of Tonality," and an original exposition of the technique characteristic of the new French school. Alban Berg's atonal opera, "Wozzek," which was a great success in Berlin this year, is discussed and there is a study of modern French music composed for the films. Drawings of Copland and Honegger are included in this issue.

FREE TO THE PUBLIC.

The American Orchestral Society gives its third concert in Cooper Union this evening under the auspices of the People's Institute. Chalmers Clifton will conduct Brahms's first symphony, Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" and Saint-Saëns's cello concerto, in which the soloist is Gerald Warburg.

Henry T. Fleck lectures on Brahms next Wednesday evening at Hunter College in the Adolph Lewisohn Course of Appreciation of Music. The Trio Classique will play Brahms's trio in C major and the trio in F major by Saint-Saëns.

Samuel A. Baldwin's free organ recital this afternoon at the City College includes, besides the usual classics of Bach, Lemare's "Glow-Worm" and "Fire-Fly," a concert study for pedals by Yon and the "Spring Song" of Mendelssohn.

The Music School Settlement, at 55 East Third Street, holds its regular monthly concert this afternoon, when the senior orchestra will play under the direction of Melzar Chaffee.

Vincenzo Aliotta, violinist, appears this afternoon at Washington Irving High School, assisted by Illuminato Meserendino, in music for two violins, and by Marie Wiethan at the piano.

Greta Masson, Margarita Zipperi, Evelyn Sidell, the Rev. Emanuel Stieri, Henri Duval and Hannah and Henry Danielowitz are on next Wednesday's free program at De Witt Clinton High School.

BROOKLYN MUSIC.

Mischa Levitzki has a piano recital Tuesday evening at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn, playing from Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Chopin, Levitzki and Schulz-Evler.

Baldwin Allan-Allen, baritone, sings a program of old English, Scotch and Gaelic songs on Wednesday evening at the Brooklyn Academy.

The Brooklyn Music Settlement holds a Spring festival at the Academy on Saturday evening, with a program of piano, violin and orchestral numbers, followed by "The Pied Piper of Hamelin" and the "Persian Garden."

The Brooklyn Saengerbund has arranged to broadcast through Station WNYC a concert to be given at the clubhouse of the society at Park Place and Vanderbilt Avenue this evening.

The St. Cecilia Wood Wind Ensemble, directed by Bruno Labate, will give a concert this evening at Moose Hall, Long Island City.

OTHERS TO BE HEARD.

Solomon Golub, the Jewish composer, singer and poet of his people in the Old World as well as the New, will give a subscription recital of his works at Wurlitzer's on Wednesday evening, assisted by Samuel Kliachko, Donald Baker and David Sapiro.

Jonas Middleman, an eight-year-old lad, of 14 Devoe Street, Brooklyn, who won a scholarship when he first sang in the Labor Temple on East Fourteenth Street, Manhattan, will take part in a concert there on Thursday evening by the National Voice Forum, singing an air by Handel.

The National Opera Club holds a meeting Thursday afternoon at the Waldorf-Astoria, to welcome its President, Baroness von Klenner, returning from a world cruise. There will be speakers and music to mark an "International Day."

Bruno Huhn conducts the Orpheus Club of Ridgewood, N. J., at a concert in the high school of that town on Friday. Assisting as soprano soloist is Flora Negri.

Christian Schiott has announced an "artist pupils'" concert on Friday evening at Steinway Hall, assisted by Astri Ellison and Constance Lande.

BALLET AT THE PRINCESS.

Richard Herndon presents Alexandre Gavrilov's Ballet Moderne for a limited engagement of six weeks at the Princess Theatre, beginning tomorrow night. The protagonist of the troupe recalls the Diaghileff season in this country some ten years ago with the Ballet Russe, of which Gavrilov was one of the leading male dancers.

The Gavrilov program at the Princess, covering every period from ancient dance forms to the jazz of the hour, has been arranged by Vladimir Heifetz, who will direct the orchestra. In the ballets and "intermedes" Gavrilov will be assisted by Georgia Ingram, Vera Strelskaya and a company of fifty.

"Pierrot of the Minute," by Granville Bantock, the English composer, was produced at Covent Garden, London, in 1920. It has been played by orchestras, but not as yet danced in America. Other interesting ballets will be "Bas-relief," with music, by Paul Dukes; the Weber "Spectre de la Rose," which was danced in turn by Gavrilov and Nijinski in 1916-1917, and "The Roguish Faun," to music by Tchaikovsky.

If the Ballet Moderne meets with expected appreciation during its six weeks' engagement at the Princess, Messrs. Herndon and Gavrilov have the promise of a theatre of their own, to be called the Ballet Theatre and devoted exclusively to the art of the dance.

GROVE STREET CARRIES ON.

The Opera Players will begin their second week of presenting opera in intimate form at the Grove Street Theatre next Tuesday evening, there being no Monday night performance at the new "little home for opera" just below Sheridan Square.

It is announced that "The Immortal Hour," Rutland Boughton's opera-drama which had its American première at the hands of this new opera organization last Tuesday evening, will continue indefinitely. For the coming week the cast will remain the same as last, except that Nicolai Vasilieff, a young Russian tenor heard in December in the "Song of India" in Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Sadko," will sing the rôle of Midir, King of the Hidden People, who woos Etain from her earth home back to the Land of Beauty.

The second week of the Opera Players will also find Joyce Borden still singing Etain, Jack Gurney in the difficult rôle of Dalua, Dall Cox as King Eochaidh, Marian Kuschke as Maive, and Willard Vining in the rôle of Manus.

CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA.

Bach's B minor mass forms the third and last program of the Oratorio Society, as elsewhere announced. Forty rehearsals have preceded the performance of the work, which takes place next Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall. Mr. Stoessel's choristers this season have also presented the "Elijah" and the annual Christmas "Messiah."

Mozart's "Requiem" will be sung for the first time in many years in concert form at its performance this afternoon by the Friends of Music as their closing event of their thirteenth season. Seven of the eleven programs given have been with chorus, and in the future more will be devoted to choral music. Next season will open Oct. 31 with the Missa Solemnis of Beethoven. The performance of the Requiem this afternoon will be dedicated to the memory of Franz Kneisel.

Verdi's "Manzoni Requiem," which may be considered as a complete evening's performance and thus as the fiftieth musical production by Mr. Gatti-Casazza's forces this year, is sung at the Metropolitan tonight outside of the usual Sunday concert series. The event is a benefit arranged by the committee headed by George Gordon Battle to purchase the Knox estate at Ridgefield, Conn., as a home for physicians.

George Zaslawsky, making his local début as conductor this week with the Philharmonic Orchestra, is a Russian who studied with Sevcik at Kieff, with Marteau in Paris and at Petrograd, with Auer, Nicolai Solovieff and Liadow. In 1908 Mr. Zaslawsky toured Russia at the head of his own orchestra. He founded the Filarmonica School, and out of this developed the Society of Opera for Young Artists. Since his activities in Russia came to an end in 1920 he has filled guest engagements with orchestras in Prague, Berlin and Paris, and the Philharmonic of Buenos Aires.

OPERA PLANS TOLD.

The Metropolitan Opera Company will begin its annual week of opera in Atlanta on April 19 with "Aida." Then follow "Don Quichotte," "La Bohème" and "Pagliacci," "Jewels of the Madonna," "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Tannhäuser" and "Trovatore." Messrs. Serafin, Hasselmans, Papi and Bamboschek will direct the performance on tour.

At Cleveland the stars from New York give ten days of opera, April 26 to May 5, and a local management points with pride to one double bill with both Gigli and Martinelli. The Ohio opera-goers will hear "La Cena delle Beffe," "Boris," "Gioconda," "Romeo and Juliet," "Samson and Delilah," "Lucia," "Cavalleria" and "Bohème," "Rigoletto," "Don Quichotte" and "Aida."

The opera company's final stop at Rochester, N. Y., includes two performances, probably "Rigoletto" and "Tosca." It may be noted that Marion Talley's performances have been asked for by all three of the cities on the tour. Those of the artists not engaged in Summer festivals will return East to sail for Europe or complete their arrangements for next season.

Mr. Chaliapin has become a sponsor for young American talent in the person of a coloratura soprano, Marguerite Cobbey of Fresno, Cal. She sang for the Russian star when he visited the Pacific Coast two years ago and was advised to come to New York for further training. Next Fall she will tour with Chaliapin in "The Barber of Sevilla."

The third special performance of Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffmann" at the opera Monday afternoon is a benefit for the Free Milk Fund for Babies, whose manager reports the sale of seats has made a record even for the Metropolitan. This will be the last appearance this season of Marion Talley at the opera house.

Miss Talley is giving her first concert in Hartford, Conn., this afternoon. The Capitol Theatre there is sold out in advance to an audience of over 3,000. Her program will include airs by Rossini, Veracini, Handel, Liszt, Bishop and Strauss. She will be assisted by Alberto Salvi, harpist, and Emil Polak, pianist.

A TENOR STIRS PARIS.

It is rumored that Paris has discovered a new Caruso. The London Daily Telegraph tells the story of a young Italian applying at the Paris Conservatoire for admission to the singing classes. It was explained to him that the entrance examinations for the year were over. The young man pleaded for a hearing and two of the professors consented to give him an audition. M. Albert Carré happened to be passing at the time and was struck by what he heard. The young Italian proved the possessor of a tenor voice, "such as appears about once in a generation." M. Carré introduced him to the manager of the Opéra Comique who immediately engaged him.

THE MUSIC HORIZON.

In the name of the Carolyn Beebe New York Chamber Music Society and through the National Federation of Music Clubs, C. C. Birchard is offering a prize of $1,000 for a Chamber music composition to be played at the next biennial meeting at Chicago in 1927. The National Federation has offered another prize of $1,000 for a new symphony.

The Friends of Music will observe Beethoven's centenary by presenting his "Missa Solemnis" at the Metropolitan Opera, Oct. 31, Artur Bodanzky conducting the full orchestra of the Philharmonic Society. The chorus will be trained by Stephen Townsend and the quartet will include Elizabeth Rethberg and Marion Telva.

The National Federation of Music Clubs is arranging a series of music contests for junior and senior students in piano, violin and voice. The junior contest is for young Americans of 16 years and under, the students must be between the ages of 16 and 24, and the young artists, entirely trained in the United States, must be between the ages of 20 and 32. The contests, which begin in the individual States, will culminate at the biennial convention of the National Federation, to be held at Chicago in the Spring of 1927.

Georges Enesco will not be in America next season but he will return for the season 1927-28. In the four consecutive seasons that he has toured this country, he has appeared fifteen times with the Philadelphia Orchestra, five times with the New York Symphony, six times with the Boston, six with the Cleveland Orchestra, besides playing with the New York State, Chicago, Detroit, San Francisco and Portland Orchestras.

The New York Symphony Society will offer twenty Sunday afternoon concerts at the Mecca Auditorium, under the direction of Walter Damrosch and Otto Klemperer, on Oct. 31, Nov. 7, 21, 28; Dec. 5, 19, 26; Jan. 2, 9, 16, 23; Feb. 6, 13, 20, 27; March 6, 13, 27; April 3, 10. There will be five symphony concerts for children on Saturday mornings at Carnegie Hall, on Oct. 30, Nov. 13, 27; Dec. 11 and Jan. 8; six symphony concerts for young people on Saturday afternoons, Nov. 6, Dec. 4, Jan. 1, 22; Feb. 12 and 26.

Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein, widow of the late impresario, has secured the Manhattan Opera House and intends to give a season of modern French grand opera next Winter, opening on the anniversary, in December, of the first presentation by the late Oscar Hammerstein of grand opera at the Manhattan. Mrs. Hammerstein sailed for Paris last week to organize the company and to secure, if possible, the rights to "Fay Yen Fah," the Chinese opera by Templeton Crocker and Joseph Redding, which received its première at Monte Carlo last year.

Lubka Kolessa, Viennese pianist and pupil of Leschetizky, will make her appearance in America in the season of 1927-28. She has toured Finland, Holland, Italy, Austria, Poland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Hungary and Czechoslovakia with success.

A 'NEW' WEST SIDE TRAFFIC ARTERY

If Legislature Consents, Car Tracks Will Be Removed From Central Park West—Vigorous Opposition Begun by Park Lovers

AN eight-year campaign to convert Central Park West into a great boulevard worthy of its position in Manhattan seems about to succeed. A bill has been introduced in the State Legislature authorizing the city to remove the street car tracks preliminary to a reconstruction of the thoroughfare. Vigorous opposition must be met, however, before the plan can go through. The entire cost of the development will be met by property owners.

Central Park West is the only north and south street restricted to one-way traffic. North-bound vehicular traffic is diverted to Broadway or to the pleasure drives of Central Park. In the afternoon Central Park West is therefore, almost deserted, while Broadway is congested.

Under the new plan Central Park West will accommodate both north and south bound traffic, thus relieving Broadway and the Central Park roadways. The improvement, it is argued, can be accomplished without encroaching upon Central Park. But opponents of the measure recall that Central Park extends to the curb line and includes the sidewalk that is to be removed. A scheme of tree planting is planned which will enhance the attractiveness of Central Park West.

Strips Half Sidewalk.

Removal of the street railway tracks, it is pointed out, will cause no inconvenience to travelers for the opening of the new subway beneath Central Park West will give the residents of this section improved transit facilities, making them virtually independent of the surface lines. The present time is called suitable for making the improvement, since the street is now torn up by the subway construction and the changes necessary for developing the thoroughfare along new lines can readily be made.

Although Central Park West was originally laid out on generous lines, the design proved to be faulty. The street is 100 feet in width, but the sidewalks occupy 52 per cent. of this space. The sidewalk along the park wall measures twenty-seven feet in width. It was laid out in the belief that it would become the great promenade of the future city. As a matter of fact it has been little used, since people prefer to walk in the park itself.

Under the original plan only forty-eight feet were left for the roadway between the curb lines. When the double tracks of the street railroad were laid down, occupying fifteen feet, there remained but thirty-three feet of roadway for north and south bound traffic. Later, the tracks were moved over to the east side of the avenue in order to make it convenient for the crowds that were expected to travel to and from the Park along Eighth Avenue. Under this plan northbound vehicular traffic on the east side of the roadway was crowded against the southbound street cars, and many accidents resulted. Later Central Park West was restricted to southbound traffic.

Maples to Be Set Out.

The new plan will reduce the width of the easterly and westerly sidewalks on Central Park West to allow a roadway sixty-nine feet in width. This would permit the passage of eight rows of vehicles, or four abreast both north and south. Experts hold that New York needs a new north and south street for its rapidly increasing traffic. It has been proposed that a new street be laid out by cutting its way through solid blocks of houses. The cost of such a street would be enormous. The development of Central Park West will in a sense add a new avenue to Manhattan, where it is badly needed, at comparatively slight expense. Critics of the scheme reason, however, that a very small amount of traffic relief will result in comparison with the enormous size of the traffic problem as a whole.

The digging of the new subway in Central Park West has destroyed all the trees along the east side as far north as Ninety-seventh Street. The trees have been slowly dying for years. Now it is proposed to develop a new scheme of planting throughout the entire length of Central Park West, thus restoring the avenue to its original appearance. Experiments have been carried out by the Park Department to determine what trees are best suited for street planting. It has been found that the Norway maple thrives best on Manhattan Island, and this tree will be planted in Central Park West. Last year a tree measuring fourteen inches in diameter was successfully transplanted in the park, and if this can be done in Central Park West the time required for the growth of saplings will be eliminated.

BOOTBLACKS IN PARIS FEW AND RELUCTANT

ONE of the things an American visitor notices in Paris is the almost complete absence of places at which one can have one's shoes shined.

In front of the Gare St. Lazare, where most of the travelers from across the sea enter the city, there stands a man who polishes shoes more or less effectively. Another, a gray-haired workman who smokes a pipe, is stationed on the north side of the Place de l'Opéra.

Both use boxes somewhat resembling those carried by the bootblacks of City Hall Park and Bryant Park, but a bit more ornate; and the customer must stand during the shining. In an American barber shop on the Rue de Rivoli you can, if you insist, get a "shine." The barber, who explains that he does not speak French, summons by the sign language a tall, stiff man dressed in black, who bends with great difficulty and manipulates the shoe brush in a forced and reluctant manner. There are a few other shoe shining establishments in the French capital, but they are not commonly known.

In the hotels one puts one's shoes outside the door upon retiring, and discovers in the morning that the dust has been brushed off, but nothing added.

LONGEST ESCALATOR

LONDON has the world's longest escalator, at the Tube station at Oxford Circus. The length of the shaft is 122 feet, width 4 feet, and its descent from the street level is 54 feet. A wooden box runs the full length, this being covered with knobs to prevent hastening passengers from sliding down, but the "box" is really for the purpose of hiding small stone steps, enabling engineers to repair the escalator with celerity in case of breakdown. At first passengers expressed nervousness at the length of the journey, so now at intervals semi-circular black rings decorate the shaft, producing the optical effect of a shorter perspective. The escalator carries 79,000 persons a day.

GEORGIA'S CURB ON CHILD LABOR

New State Law Applies to Minors Up to 18 Years of Age—Designed to Protect Health and Morals

By A. H. ULM.

GEORGIA, often called a laggard in regulating the employment of children, has just put into effect what its officials call the most comprehensive and rigid child labor law yet enacted in this country. The law was passed largely at the instigation of employers, who joined with reform organizations in shaping its provisions, and whose representatives appeared personally before the Legislature in support of it.

"We took what are regarded as the most stringent regulations enforced by other States, selected those that were applicable to conditions here, wrote them into the bill and, in at least one instance, amplified the regulations beyond what any other State has done," said Hal M. Stanley, Georgia Commissioner of Commerce and Labor, who is charged with the law's enforcement. "This law should remove all reason for future criticism of the State of Georgia in the matter of dealing with the child labor problem."

The law rules against the employment of any person under 14 years of age in any kind of manufacturing establishment. It does not specifically cover employment in stores or street trades, as do the statutes of a few States, but it bars the employment of all persons under 16 "in any place or occupation which the State Board of Health may declare dangerous to life or limb or injurious to the health or morals of such persons." The statute itself specifies many kinds of employment that come within this prohibition.

Only two kinds of employment are excepted from all regulation—domestic and agricultural. The law comprehends and deals with the employment of persons under 18 in all other occupations.

Age Limits Are Raised.

In factory employments not rated as dangerous persons between 14 and 16 may be employed only under quite rigid regulations. These include authentic establishment of age, ability to read and write the English language and a health officer's certification of age and physical fitness for the employment. This last must be procured before employment may be given to any one between 16 and 18 years in industrial or dangerous work. No one under 16 may be employed in night work.

The head of the State Labor Department has an inspection force to see that the law is observed. Parents and guardians are held subject to punishment, equally with employers, for permitting children to be employed in violation of the law.

"Certificates are now being issued to persons who qualify for work in trades covered by the law," said Commissioner Stanley at his office in Atlanta recently. "From reports that have have been made, I should say that between 2,000 and 4,000 persons between the ages of 14 and 18 will try to qualify under the law for employment. Certificates are required in almost every kind of industrial work.

"The State's compulsory education law operates separately from the child labor laws."

Both of these statutes apply to negroes as well as whites.

Writers Have Exaggerated.

"Child labor conditions in Georgia and the South generally have been much exaggerated by many writers, particularly in recent years," the Commissioner added. "Our laws were not as rigid as they might have been, but contributory factors caused many children, not covered by the old laws, to be excluded from industrial employment, notably in the cotton mills, which have been the supposedly biggest employers of small children."

He called attention to the fact that the census of 1920 showed only 468 persons under 14 working in all of the cotton mills of the South. In Georgia there were only 90. The number under 16 thus employed in the South was 5,968, while the corresponding figure for the New England cotton mills was 6,246. The percentage of all cotton mill workers, he said, under 16 in the South was 5.9, against 6 per cent. in New England. This proportion, it is believed, has been considerably reduced since 1920 in both sections.

Georgia, like most Southern States, enacted no child labor laws until about twenty years ago. The first ones were so conservative and allowed so many exceptions that their effect was negligible. Georgia strengthened its regulations in 1914, making 14 the minimum age, but still allowing many exceptions. Alabama enacted substantially what has long been the law in Massachusetts. The new Georgia law, although based on the Alabama and Massachusetts statutes, goes further in some respects.

Fear that regulation of child employment would impede the development of the textile industry in the South caused previous opposition by mill owners. They are no longer of that opinion. The drift of the industry to the South cannot now be accredited to the greater availability of child labor.

WEEK IN SOCIETY INCLUDES WEDDINGS OF IMPORTANCE

WEDDINGS AND ENGAGEMENTS OF THE WEEK

International Interest Is Attached to One of the Approaching Marriages

AN international marriage of much interest takes place on Saturday afternoon when Miss Margaretta Edwards Wherry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Wherry Jr. of 42 East Sixty-sixth Street, will become the bride of F. Hugh Treherne-Thomas, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Treherne-Thomas of London, England, in the chapel of St. Bartholomew's Church. The bridegroom-elect, accompanied by his parents, and his brother, Kenneth Treherne-Thomas, arrived last week on the Aquitania.

There will be a round of entertainments for Miss Wherry and Mr. Treherne-Thomas this week. They will begin today with a tea at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Strong of 45 East Ninth Street. A dinner-dance will be given for them Wednesday night at Sherry's by Mrs. R. E. Breed, aunt of Miss Wherry, and on Thursday night Miss Barbara Monell of this city and Tuxedo Park, who will be one of the bridesmaids, will give a dinner at Pierre's, where on Friday Russell Armstrong will give a luncheon for the entire bridal party. On Friday night, following the rehearsal, Mr. and Mrs. Wherry will give a dinner at the Embassy Club, at which the guests, in addition to members of the bridal party, will include relatives and friends from London, Washington and Pittsburgh, here for the wedding.

Miss Wherry will have Miss Jane Quinby of New York for her maid of honor. The other attendants will be Mrs. Thomas M. Parker of Detroit, who before her marriage in January was Miss Melinda Dwyer of New York; Miss Jane Breed, cousin of the bride-elect, of New York; Miss Louise Osborne of New York and Stockbridge; Miss Barbara Monell of New York and Tuxedo Park; Miss Katherine Stebbins of Watertown, N. Y., and Miss Margaret Duryee of Englewood, N. J. Thomas R. Robinson will be best man for Mr. Treherne-Thomas. The ushers will be Lieutenant Miles Reber, U. S. A.; Kenneth Treherne-Thomas, brother of the bridegroom; Captain Eugene A. Regnier, U. S. A.; Andrew Benny of Pittsburgh, Bruce Buttfield and Robert M. Popham.

The ceremony, which will be at 4 o'clock, will be followed by a reception at Sherry's. Mr. Treherne-Thomas and his bride will sail the following day on the Samaria from Boston for Liverpool. Following their wedding trip through England they will live at Langland Bay, Chelsea.

Among the guests at the wedding will be representatives of the military and social circles in Washington, D. C.

Miss Wherry was graduated from Miss Hall's School in Pittsburgh. She was presented to society in Washington at a reception given by her uncle, Brig. Gen. John L. Her mother is a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henry Zug of Pittsburgh. Mr. Zug was the builder of the well-known Zug Iron Works of that city. Through her mother Miss Wherry is a descendant of Governor Bradford of Massachusetts.

The Treherne-Thomas family is of old English stock, long associated with the British tinplate, steel and iron industry. Richard Thomas & Co., of which the bridegroom's father is head, is the largest concern of its kind in England. Mr. Treherne-Thomas, who was graduated from Harrow, is connected with the Cunfelin Tinplate Works, one of the companies controlled by his father's organization.

STAGE CHILDREN PREPARE REVUE

Annual School Benefit Will Be Given Twice Late in April

ONE of the annual incidents of the Spring season is the entertainment for the benefit of the Professional Children's School which will be held at the Walter Hampden Theatre on the afternoons of April 27 and 30.

This school, established in 1914 through the efforts of Mrs. Franklin W. Robinson, the former Miss Jean Greer, a daughter of the late Right Rev. David H. Greer, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, has not been carried on as an institution for teaching the art of the drama. It is instead a school at which children of the stage are given an opportunity for a good education. The school is attended regularly by children who are members of the cast of current theatrical productions of New York, and while on the road their studies are kept up.

There will be a departure in the program this year, and in place of a regular play, under the direction of Ned Wayburn, the children are preparing a revue, with short scenes taken from successful plays and musical comedies now being produced in the Broadway theatres. These children will give impersonations of such artists as Marylyn Miller, Queenie Smith, Mary Hay, Gilda Gray, Al Jolson or Clifton Webb.

Mrs. E. Roland Harriman is taking a personal interest in the two performances and is in charge of the sale of seats and boxes, which may be obtained at the National City Bank, Park Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street.

The Board of Managers of the Professional Children's School includes Mrs. Franklin W. Robinson, President; Mrs. E. Gerry Chadwick, Miss Zelina T. Clark, Mrs. James B. Clemens, Mrs. Frederick P. Delafield, Mrs. John A. Dix, Mrs. Robert L. Gerry, Mrs. Edwin Gould, Miss Adele Hammond, Mrs. E. Roland Harriman, Mrs. Henry Reese Hoyt, Mrs. William A. "DYBBUK" WILL BE GIVEN FOR THE UNITY LEAGUE

A SPECIAL performance of "The Dybbuk" will be given at the Neighborhood Playhouse on the night of April 22 for the benefit of the Protestant Unity League. Tickets may be purchased from Robert Ripley, 260 West Seventy-eighth Street, or at the office of the league, 500 Fifth Avenue.

The officers of the Protestant Unity League include the Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, President; Mrs. George W. Danziger and Mrs. C. D. Lowrie, Vice Presidents; Mrs. Guy Beaver King, Secretary, and Mrs. Robert Ripley Bush, Treasurer.

LAST OF THE MID-YEAR DANCES

THE Mid-Year Dances will have an extra Spring meeting on Saturday night in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton. This will be the last subscription dance of the season. The Mid-Years were organized several years ago for young married couples and girls who have been in society three or four seasons, and they have proved popular. As usual there will be a number of dinners in advance of the dance.

On the committee are Mrs. Philip Golden Bartlett, Mrs. Rudolph H. Kissel, Mrs. N. Thayer Robb, Mrs. Clarence Mitchell, Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, Mrs. Richard M. Hurd and Mrs. Pierre Jay.

Among the subscribers are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Lamont, Mr. and Mrs. John Jay Schieffelin, Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop Kean, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. SPRING BALL FRIDAY NIGHT

Event Is to Provide Funds for the Work of International Migration Service

THE Spring Ball at the Ritz-Carlton on Friday night is being given to provide funds for the work of the International Migration Service, which assists persons with problems arising as a consequence of migration. The service also studies the conditions and consequences of migration and the effect on individual, family and social life. The ball has been arranged under the chairmanship of Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss Jr.

The American branch of the Migration Service cooperates with the offices of the association in Geneva and the bureaus of Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, Greece and Poland. Calls upon the local branch have increased rather than decreased since the restricting of immigration, particularly because of the growing number of deportees each year.

The service renders, without charge and irrespective of race, nationality or religion, aid extending from old homes to new. A total of 14,988 families have been aided by the International Migration Service, 6,000 of this number being aided by the American branch.

Mrs. Auchincloss will give a dinner before the ball, as will also Miss Muriel Wurts-Dundas, who is Chairman of the Debutante Committee and who will take her guests to the opera and then to the Ritz-Carlton. Others who will give dinners include Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw, Mrs. Charles S. McVeigh, Mrs. Frank Frazier, Mrs. Robert J. Caldwell, Mrs. Simeon B. Chapin, Miss Laura Carter, Miss Jane Clark, Miss Grace Hays and Miss Ann R. Taylor.

The Executive Committee which has assisted in making arrangements includes Miss Wurts-Dundas, Mrs. Cleveland E. Dodge, Mrs. Robert W. Kelley, Mrs. Harold Hartshorne, Mrs. William H. Coverdale, Mrs. Edgerton Parsons, Mrs. G. Francklyn Lawrence Jr. and Mrs. Stanton Williams.

Frederick M. Warburg is Chairman of the Floor Committee. Other members of the committee are G. Francklyn Lawrence Jr., Clinton Gray, R. McAllister Lloyd Jr., George Barclay, Gerald Dorman, Gurney Taylor, John Wiley and T. Houston Solley.

The Debutante Committee includes Miss Muriel Wurts-Dundas, Chairman, and the Misses Bertha Benkard, Antoinette Clemens, Mary Cogswell, Huguette Clark, Clarissa Dyer, Lydia Dadmun, Emily Floyd, Genevieve Fox, Alice Gallwey, Lucy Gurnee, Naomi Douglas, Grace Hays, Miriam Miller, Mary McKesson, Alice Parsons, Natalie Peters and Louise Laidlaw.

OPPORTUNITY WEEK FOR ANTI-TUBERCULOSIS WORK

INSTEAD of carrying on a campaign for funds to be used for the upkeep of the work of the Tuberculosis Committee of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, it is proposed to hold an Opportunity Week beginning tomorrow at the Opportunity Shop, 46 West Forty-seventh Street.

Requests have been made for any sort of discarded articles that may be useful to those who are not well supplied with money, including anything from wearing apparel to household furniture, which can be sold at a moderate price. The proceeds of the week's sale will be devoted to 5,000 tuberculous children and for other relief work now in progress to eradicate this dread disease.

The demand for such articles exceeds the supply, and the problem that now faces the committee is how to secure articles for sale. The shop has been arranged by experts for the proper display of contributed goods, which under the circumstances do not have the appearance of rummage. The price on each article is plainly marked and the profits come from quick sales at fair prices rather than holding for a greater sum. There are workshops in which garments are put in good condition or furniture mended. These are operated by men and women unable to work under ordinary conditions. In addition to clothing for children they make cushions, scarves and aprons to order. The Jefferson Needlecraft Shop at 625 Lexington Avenue maintains a department where a new and beautiful type of lampshade is sold.

Members of the Committee of Eighty in charge of the Opportunity Shop include Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. Henry M. Alexander, Mrs. George F. Baker Jr., Mrs. Courtlandt D. Barnes, Mrs. George Gordon Battle, Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Mrs. August Belmont, Mrs. Hermann M. Biggs, Mrs. Courtlandt F. Bishop, Mrs. Francis C. Bishop, Mrs. Dexter Blagden, Mrs. Linzee Blagden, Mrs. Edson Bradley, Mrs. James McVickar Breed, Mrs. Robert S. Brewster, Mrs. Kenneth P. Budd, Mrs. William A. M. Burden, Mrs. Francis H. GARDEN VISITS ARE ARRANGED FOR SPRING

Wayside Home School Benefits by Fees From Inspection Of Estates

IF the powers that rule the elements are propitious, May garden days will have great attraction for those who live in the Long Island section adjacent to the metropolis and for others who desire to view the gardens attached to numerous estates within easy motoring distance of the city.

For several years directors of the Wayside Home School for Girls, which is in Valley Stream, L. I., have found these garden days of great aid in raising funds for the upkeep of the institution. The Wayside Home is situated in the midst of a farm of forty acres, convenient to New York, and it cares for girls who have been unfortunate and misguided. At the home they are trained in domestic arts, having also a healthy outdoor existence. They stay at home until they are able to take again their places in the world, and they are sent to carefully selected homes for some kind of household occupation.

Many of the girls who have enjoyed the advantages and privileges of the home have become self-supporting. Some have been fitted in trained nursing or business pursuits.

All receipts from these inspections of Long Island gardens have from year to year been given to the home. There is a moderate charge for entrance. Directions for reaching the gardens, with maps of the localities, are sent out by members of the committee. Season tickets also may be obtained for the period, which extends over the months of May, June, July and September.

Mrs. Roswell Eldridge of Great Neck is Chairman of the committee and associated with her are Mrs. James Timpson, Mrs. William Beard, Mrs. Ralph Peters Jr., Mrs. Bradford G. Weekes, Mrs. William W. Cocks, Mrs. Lewis A. Eldridge of Hempstead, Mrs. George L. Hubbell of Garden City, Mrs. Arthur W. Rossiter of Glen Cove and Mrs. George A. Thayer of Port Washington, from any of whom season tickets may be secured.

Four Gardens on May List.

For the coming season several gardens that have been shown in former years will again be open. Their charm in Spring and Summer invites more than a casual visit. Four gardens will be shown next month, and these have been selected for their special growth of shrubs and early flowering plants.

First to be shown will be the garden of Burrwood, the country place of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jennings in Cold Spring Harbor, on May 6. This garden is considered one of the most beautiful on Long Island. It overlooks the waters of the Sound and in the disposition of shrubbery nature is carefully followed and to such an extent that it seems to be almost a natural wild garden. If the season is not too backward, the dogwood trees will be in full bloom, and in contrast there is a formal garden with its flowers of the early Spring to give color to the scene.

A week later, May 13, there will be an opportunity to inspect the gardens of Ormston House, the estate of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Aldred in Locust Valley. The great stone house of the estate, like an old English castle, is on an elevation approached by winding driveways. From its main entrance there is the vista of formal garden with hundreds of Darwin tulips surrounded by close-clipped boxwood hedges and great widths of well-kept turf. In addition there will be row upon row of tulips in all possible colors in beds guarded by hedges, and there also are winding paths marked by broken flags as a setting.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Grace will open to the public on May 20, Tulloroan, their country home in Manhasset. The house, of red brick of Colonial style, overlooks a formal garden with borders of variegated tulips, and there is also a terraced garden where next month tulips will be at their best. Their brilliant colorings will be somewhat subdued by the rows of paler narcissi. Boxwood shrubs and an ever-playing fountain add to the picturesqueness of the scene. There also will be shown a hidden garden surrounded by brick walls covered with vines.

Meadow Farms to Be Visited.

As a bonne bouche there will be shown on the last day, May 27, the gardens of Meadow Farm, the country place of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Cox in Mill Neck. The house itself is ancient, but it has been somewhat remodeled with a view to modern standards. While quite close to the highway, like so many homes of the eighteenth century, the house in a measure is hidden by a picturesque wall, to which entrance is gained through a quaint gateway. Although the gardens laid out under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Cox are not large, they display great variety. In their midst there is a thatched cottage that might have been transported from a Devonshire lane, and it is in this romantic structure that Mrs. Cox occupies herself with book binding.

All gardens will be shown from 2:30 to 6 on the dates mentioned. In case of inclement weather they will be shown on the day following. Through the courtesy of owners all commercial aspects will be removed through the hospitable serving of tea to all visitors.

Applications for single or season tickets may be made to any member of the committee through the offices of H. Hobart Porter, 50 Broad Street.

SOCIETY EVENTS

NEW equipment and seeds for the Russian Reconstruction Farms will be bought and forwarded to Europe with funds raised at the concert which Mme. Ina Kremer will present tonight at Carnegie Hall. Mme. Kremer will sing German, French, Russian and English folk-songs.

The Russian Reconstruction Farms operates a farm of more than 15,000 acres in Southeastern Russia, where a demonstration station is maintained to teach the Russian peasants the latest agricultural developments. The farm has been in operation for four years. It is necessary that new farm equipment and seeds be sent there at this time in anticipation of the planting season.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS SUNG TO AID SOUTHERN SCHOOL

A CONCERT of negro spirituals will be given on Friday night at the Town Hall for the benefit of the Manassas Industrial School for Colored Youth in Manassas, Va. The artists will be Paul Robeson, Lawrence Brown, Alexander Gatewood, J. Rosamond Johnson and Taylor Gordon.

The school is situated at Manassas, Va., near the site of the Battle of Bull Run. It was founded in 1894 by Jennie Dean, a colored woman born in slavery, who went from door to door begging for funds for the education of her people. With the aid of prominent people of the North, the school was finally established in one small building. Since that time it has been kept up by means of private charity and has grown to eleven buildings and 175 acres of land. Its plant is conservatively valued at $181,000.

It is now an accredited high school and is the only high school for negroes in the thirty northern counties of Virginia. Its curriculum includes seventh and eighth grades, a four-year high school course, and training in industrial pursuits. Its enrolment this year is 140. Many of these students are working their way through school.

Last Spring a $7,000 mortgage and $10,000 in bank loans were paid off, but there still remains a deficit of $11,000, consisting largely of back bills. A fund of $10,000 is now being raised. Of this, B. N. Duke has promised to contribute $2,000 when the additional $8,000 shall have been collected and it is for the purpose of completing this fund that the concert has been arranged.

Among those who have taken boxes are Mrs. Henry Villard, Mrs. Charles Frank Pope, Mrs. Henry G. Leach, Francis Rogers, Alfred A. Knopf, Oswald Garrison Villard, George Gordon Battle, Curt H. Reisinger and Charles H. Studin.

Preceding this feature there will be a fashion show, in which the participants will include girls from some of the popular musical productions of the season.

Among those who have reserved tables for this benefit are Mrs. George F. Baker Jr., Mrs. Edward Livingston Burrill Jr., Mrs. Herbert Dillon, Mrs. Charles C. Lee, Miss Estelle Manville, Mrs. Alvin Devereux, Watson Washburn, Robert V. Mahon, Rene E. Hoguet, Miss Gwendolyn Talbot, Richard Fazrally, Mrs. Chauncey B. GREAT VARIETY IN FASHIONS OF SEASON

WIDE RANGE IN STYLES

Individual Note in Dress Is Emphasized More Than Ever This Spring

IF THIS season may be described in a word, variety must be the answer. Complex, even intricate, designs have followed simple straight lines, and every opportunity is offered for originality and variation. Innumerable new ideas have been presented, but not all have been accepted by women of fashion. Never before have there been so many designs of different types from which to select one's individual model. Some of these first Spring styles foretell what will be worn; but with so much from which to choose, a capricious patronage and the increasing tendency to individuality, there is about the immediate future the fascination of uncertainty.

In the interim between fundamental changes it is detail to which attention is given. Many important things that count in the general mode are being established. There was never a more felicitous opportunity offered the woman of fashion in which to express her taste and choose the type of costume she prefers to the utmost detail. She may have the waist of her gown in period style, a bolero of many variants or a blouse, a skirt, collar or sleeve of one style or another. Any or all of these she may select as she pleases and still be in the mode.

***

AT THE moment it is the sleeve which appears to reflect the greatest number of variations in novelty of design. The arm has long been the classic model upon which have been built the lines of the prevailing fashion. Old prints, both French and English, reveal interesting and sometimes exotic sleeve styles. There has been the plain "tailleur," known by this name, whether it was made of tulle or of velvet, so it followed closely the contour of the arm. There was the "bishop," most flattering when its full-gathered material was chiffon or any other sheer stuff having that elusive, caressing quality. This sleeve was gathered full into an armhole of generous width and was drawn into a band, usually of ribbon, at the wrist, with an edge left free to form a frill, originally an exact copy of the sleeve of a Bishop's robe. The nun sleeve, cut almost straight, was wide at the top and the bottom. Of the same vintage as these were the bell shape, the angel sleeve and other models. The one among the distinctive styles of long ago which has found little encouragement in revival is the leg o' mutton, or the balloon sleeve. The others all seem to have appeared in the costumes of this season and are presented in the models of all the best artists.

***

THE sleeveless fashion, committed by women of all ages and sizes, both size and age being emphasized in the arm, endured to ennui. Then the extreme reverse followed, and designers were once more busy on sleeves of many descriptions. They were among the punctuated impressions of the exhibitions at Paris last Autumn. As early as the August openings, these radical novelties, which were really revivals, were shown by prominent couturiers. Some of the designs had an appeal to women of taste, others were obviously fantastic, and some even freakish. They were offered speculatively to American audiences. Only as the new lines have been intriguingly harmonized in a new model, however, has it made its way. Gradually the different styles of sleeves have made their appearance in the smartest costumes displayed in the most fashionable places.

***

THE long, plain sleeves, which followed closely the contour of the arm, appeared as a sort of consolation to the reluctant followers of the sleeveless period, and its vogue has been quietly accepted. Couturiers have introduced many variants for the Spring collections. These are modified to fit the specific type of gown or coat. Even the tailleur which is feminized in some of its up-to-date versions has a new type of sleeve. Lucien Lelong and Madeleine Vionnet are among those who widen the sleeves at the hand in some of their tailored frocks and coats.

Naturally there is greater latitude in the less severe types of costume, and in these the different designs of sleeves are presented in ways that are interesting and original. Lanvin illustrates the very wide sleeve, fitted into the armhole with pleats that are stitched flat for several inches, allowing the fullness to escape the length of the arm, to the wrist, where it is gathered into a narrow cuff band. This style of sleeve is particularly effective when it is made of the crisp yet supple taffeta, now so fashionable, and the effect is accentuated when the silk is one of the new sharply marked checks. Lanvin makes the skirt of the gown which has this sleeve a voluminous one, the entire width laid in pleats, and marks the normal waistline with a buckled belt of the silk.

***

THE full sleeve is made a feature by several designers, each of whom has his individual style. Lucien Lelong prefers to cut his with the fullness developed below the elbow. In a charming afternoon gown of georgette crêpe, plain sleeves that ease slightly below the elbow are finished with embroidery, with full gathered undersleeves tied with little straps at the hand. This model, with the full undersleeve detail or fullness of material attached at the elbow or lower and confined at the wrist, is emphasized by some of the best houses, including Redfern, but it is considered less becoming than some others among the new styles, for the hand beneath this sleeve must be exceedingly slender.

One among the Paris creators who handles this sleeve model with skill is Lenief, who widens it below the elbow and adds a knife-pleated frill along the back. Tulle is quite lovely in a sleeve of this soft sort, as a prominent American designer has illustrated in two particularly smart evening gowns.

THE grace and style possible to express in a flowing sleeve are illustrated in several models of marked distinction. In Drécoll's Spring collection the extremely wide sleeve is introduced. The sleeve itself fits the arm closely from shoulder to elbow, where the material, attached without fullness, flares sharply and is of a width that almost covers the hand. In a chiffon frock the sleeve is cut, kimono fashion, in one piece with the frock and a pleated godet is inserted at the back of the arm, giving an extra flare.

The double sleeve is another model that is liked by some designers and presented lately by Jenny and Doeuillet. This is a safe model for the tailored suit, coat frock or coat, for the sleeve is cut a generous width and is sometimes slit at the back, opening over the undersleeve of another material, usually white.

The little cap sleeve which was fashionable several seasons ago has reappeared and in contrast to this Molyneux is making a model in which four bands of material on a tight-fitting foundation give the effect of a tiered sleeve. Doeuillet is one of the designers who cuts a sleeve straight to a point below the elbow and of sufficient width to form a modified puff as it is gathered into the wristband. In some smart gowns of American design the plain elbow sleeve has appeared.

***

EVENING gowns are almost without exception sleeveless, as they are shown by many intriguing creations from leading Parisian dressmakers. Some models of much charm are from Vionnet, Louise Boulanger, Jean Patou, Lenief, Martial et Armand, Philippe et Gaston. In fact, there are almost no exceptions to this treatment in the design

SMART COATS FOR JUNIORS

Variety of Fabrics and Shades Available — Jumper Suits Are Shown in Many Colors

COATS for the junior crowd are unusually smart this year. The sports things are shown in fabrics that belong traditionally and logically to heavier garments, the tweeds, covert, diagonals, mixtures, both imported and domestic. Few of the crude colors and startling patterns of last year are anywhere in evidence. Now and then something really chic of conspicuous design is shown, but the keynote is restraint. The plain tailored genuinely sports type of top coat is favored. The cape coat, for which the younger set has shown a preference, is usually made of plain goods or a small check. Fur is used on almost every type of coat except the ragian. Very few novelties have been added to the radical styles of the Autumn, but some furs that are modish for misses' sports coats are the oyster-gray caracul, monkey, Summer ermine, civet cat, baby leopard and the old and always beautiful silver and blue foxes.

***

WITH the jumper the latest skirt is invariably pleated, giving greater freedom of movement and additional smartness of appearance. For this the materials differ very little from those of last season. Their selection depends largely upon the occasion for which the suit is made. For the Spring out-of-doors activities there are the new worsted and woolens, practicable for a jumper suit because they are finer and lighter than heretofore. They are soft, firm, silky in texture and include the newest colors. In plain goods, which is increasingly fashionable in contrast of sharp and conspicuous patterns just past, are lovely reps, poplins, wool crêpes, kasha, plain and novel; basket-weave tweeds, cashmere, jersey.

Varying from these are fabrics which are shown in beige, tans, browns, greens and blues, with much red. In these delightful new achievements of the loom are many novelties in stripes, mixtures, broken patterns and checks, which are particularly good this season. In the check patterns alone are many interesting and unusual arrangements, giving novel effects and pleasant variations of color. Some large plaids and block checks are shown. But these are exceptional. The correct thing for the junior and misses dress of whatever type is a small check of even or uneven spaces.

There is scarlet, flame, geranium, coral and a few of the softer tones copied from fabrics from the Far East.

Paris Approves the Flare and the Bishop Sleeve, as Exemplified in Frocks of Satin or Printed Chiffon.

NOVELTIES FOR SPRING

Flowers of Gold Metal Thread, Ankle Corsages, and Other New Things

TINY flowers in gold metal thread give a touch of color to the new satin bags, cigarette sets and envelope vanities. The bags come in two sizes, those that are small and fitted with the necessary accessories and the larger ones with simpler fittings, consisting of two shirred pockets which hold a purse and a mirror. The cigarette sets, with corresponding cases for matches, come with white kid linings or colored silks. The envelope vanities may be had fitted or not, and have a fancy cut motif in jade on the flap. A narrow strap with a double looped beaded fringe and have a flat toy. Another interesting feature is the studded bar on which they are mounted. These bars are finished off with colored stones which match the rest of the bag and closely resemble ornate tapestry poles. Slender links make up the chain handle of sterling silver.

***

THERE are so many varieties of furs and skins—furs that Noah never saw in the Ark—that some of the new names baffle even resort to an encyclopedia to determine whether any animal so named ever actually existed. Every season fashion demands its novelties, and when the range of natural furs is exhausted man invents new ones for the sake of variety. There are two points of view with regard to dyed furs as against natural skins. As an investment and from the standpoint of elegance, natural fur usually has the best of the argument. On the other hand, the dyed fur novelties are not so expensive but that they can be discarded at the end of the season, and they contribute wide variety in costume touches.

***

BROCADED metal shawls in large squares and oblongs, so much in vogue during the past Palm Beach season, are being shown in a greater variety of colors for evening wear with Spring and Summer dresses. Long fringe in straight and knotted strands is equally popular. The colors, however, seem to be confined to the pastel shades, particularly mauves, yellows and flesh tints.

***

Galalith is again successfully used in a bridge scorepad which is equipped with a pencil. The top is ornamented with the figure of a girl about to scale a fence; the foot over the fence serves as a trump indicator. The pad is cleansed like a slate.

***

Boudoir clocks of colored enamel and finished with burnished gold have gold dials and black enameled hands. All the light colors, including lavender, rose, pale blue, red, yellow and light green, are shown so that they may carry out a scheme.

***

Leather belts for women are seen more this year than for many seasons past, and sometimes in a combination that would formerly have been considered awkward. For instance, on a recent French import of chiffon and lace there was a suede belt of blue to match the fabric placed slightly below the normal waistline.

***

Suede takes such beautiful colors in the hands of a skillful dyer that it is now possible to match almost any shade on the new Spring color card. In the realm of sports clothes, especially in the Scotch tweeds and other soft woolen materials, belts are often the keynote of a costume.

***

THE vogue of the polka dot, prophesied during the late Winter, is everywhere apparent. In both silk and cotton dress materials polka dots of every size and arrangement of pattern are shown. Some are large, spaced at regular intervals, but there are few of the huge showy disks of two seasons ago when "dots" were the size of baseballs. All of the "Summer" silks, pussywillow and the crêpes and chiffons, are printed in dots, the smaller in an irregular, cluster and scattered plan being most in demand. The polka-dot pattern is much used, too, for coat linings, slips, for parasols, in scarves, ties, hat bands and handkerchiefs. Very large squares are now shown for kerchiefs to wear in the pocket of a tailored frock or a coat. These are dashing trifles made of chiffon or the sheerest mousseline. Among the novelties in hosiery are some in polka-dot designs, both the very small and those of medium size.

FLORAL corsages and bountonnière decorations have a rival in the ankle corsage. These corsages are to be worn on the right ankle and consist of small flowers such as violets or pansies in a variety of colors to harmonize with the costume. The ankle corsage has a two-fold purpose; it is supposed to break the monotony of the line of the stocking and also to accentuate a pretty ankle.

***

THE necklet or choker is still in demand. Now there is the braided necklet with bracelet to match. Both are made of four-ply woven mesh strands with the loose ends finished off by a heavy metal edge. The buckle fastenings permit the necklets and bracelets to be regulated to fit the neck and arms and at the same time contribute an interesting detail. Another novelty in this line, but for the very young girl, is the dog set, consisting of collar and wristlet of colored leather lined with white kid. They are studded with nailheads and finished with a fancy clasp. The collar has a narrow metal inset as if for a name.

***

A USEFUL article is the individual hat stand which usually finds a place in any nook or corner of the dressing room. These stands come in a variety of colors and are surmounted by lovely doll heads. Heretofore they were mostly made of some unbreakable composition, but the new ones have heads of Dresden china with golden curls. Some have little bonnets of their own, while others show various styles of hair combing, from the boyish bob to the elaborate headdresses of times past.

***

FANCY dress pins, too, are following the mode in trimmings, for they are large and ornate. Instead of using silver a white metal is substituted which is lighter in weight and does not tarnish. These pins have the necessary safety catches and the smooth finish of the more expensive pins. The designs are confined to two types, the conventional model consisting of the large cut crystals and the border finish of the metal set with rhinestones. The other type includes large leafy effects, branches and flowers, in all of which are set large crystals.

***

THE return of the suit is bringing with it a revival of the petticoat. There has been sufficient demand for this article to warrant the showing of new designs. One of the new models has a shaped top attached to a band which takes the place of the elastic that is considered uncomfortable to the uncorseted figure. Then there are a few wrap-around petticoats which insure maximum freedom for walking without bulky effects.

***

STEEL beads in metal finish and pastel colors are used in the new small evening bags. Designs ranging from the simplest floral effects to elaborate and exotic Oriental schemes are being shown side by side. These bags are lined with white kid on the other side serves as a handle. An interesting feature of this collection of bags is that both light and dark colors are shown, making them desirable for general use.

THE WEEK IN CITY ART GALLERIES

Sea Gulls by Truman Fassett and Portraits of the Ford Family Attract Attention—The Greenwich Village Exhibition

TRUMAN E. FASSETT is artist enough to investigate the science underlying design. He is not content to leave so important a matter to chance. The particular "counterpoint" of form he is using may not be the only one, but the results of his research prove that it holds elements of truth. Pattern develops and grows before the eyes of the spectator.

Mr. Fassett has chosen to paint sea gulls. This surely is not a haphazard choice. He makes use of these splendid creatures because he knows them and is fond of them. This very opportunity for choice is an argument against those who are enemies of a scientific scheme, and who pretend that it will standardize work. An artist cannot escape himself. If he has a soul it is bound to slip out.

The great birds seem to be at the same time weighted and lighter than air. The artist has developed the pattern in a manner that stresses the paradox. One feels he has not used it to its full. There are places that might benefit by further attention. Truman E. Fassett—Ainslie Gallery—Closes April 15.

***

A Young American.

BERTHA KRAUS belongs definitely to her time; she takes her place as one of the interesting young Americans. The particular group with which she has apparently identified herself has been occupied in refining the relations of line and of value and in intensifying this purification with a clean uncompromising surface. This is an exacting problem. Every misstep shows. It permits of no atmospheric slurrings to help the weak over a difficult place.

There are some authoritative passages in the work of Miss Kraus that meet her requirements—delightful in their clear-cut assurance. The artist has used various matter—portraits, landscape, flower forms and the ever-fascinating New York scene. Bertha Kraus—The 115th Street Branch of the New York Public Library—Closes May 1.

***

Henry Ford.

C. BENNETT LINDER has just finished portraits of nine members of the Henry Ford family. The portrait galleries attached to a number of the European museums always make fascinating study. One can follow a family likeness through generations and engage in all kinds of theorizing about physiognomy and disposition. This group by Mr. Linder may ultimately find its way into some similar museum that will tell history through portraiture. Mr. Ford and his family must necessarily take part in this American tale. C. Bennett Linder—Knoedler Galleries—Closes April 17.

***

An Old Barn.

THE subject of Oscar Bluemner's water-colors, though strained away from the visual aspect, have not lost a sense of having been derived from nature. There is a quality of spontaneous crystallizing in the design. Design and subject are interrelated. The sag of an old barn, for instance, proclaims its age, but the nature of the curve is also necessary to the fulfilment of the design. Color is monotonous. There is an occasional bit of blue to testify that the world is not made entirely of red and green. Oscar Bluemner—Handicraft Centre—Closes April 15.

***

Some Little Water-Colors.

THERE is always an appeal in the miniature. Ruth Payne Burgess's water-colors have a similar charm. She does not paint a hill, but a mountain of reduced dimensions. One near Butte, Mont., is particularly entertaining because it stands so straight, as if pretending to a great size. One reaches it by a swinging white road along the tableland. Two or three nicely drawn trees are introduced. Ruth Payne Burgess—The Montross Galleries.

***

Portraits and Still Life.

ARTISTS have not yet exhausted the number of changes that can be wrung from a contemporary still life. Robert Brackman uses the customary strong flowers, peasant pottery, checked tablecloth and tiled tables—but with a difference. The various changes he has made for the sake of the design look as if they were not altered according to his whim but were a part of the actual existence of the almost animate subject.

Mr. Brackman has a teasing way of using color. He will show a triangle of red shirt worn by "A Pickaninny," for instance (the artist does not confine himself to still life), and leaves the beholder to speculate on the probable color of the garment. Robert Brackman—Babcock Galleries—closes April 16.

***

Portraits.

WILLIAM M. PAXTON'S small paintings are his most successful. They are about the size of so many of the Flemish portraits, and in a way suggest them. They are done with painstaking draftsmanship, without losing a sense of life. There is consistency in the drawing. The mouth is of a certain shape because of its relation to the line of the eyebrows. This quality is particularly marked in the portrait of a girl standing in a doorway, head up, as if she had just been called in the act of closing the door. The slant of the features intensifies the vitality of the line. William M. Paxton—The Ferargil Galleries—closes April 17.

***

Grotesques.

ANNETTE ROSENSHINE'S grotesque figurines either hug themselves gleefully over their own impish ugliness or hold out their hands for sympathy. Only one, with a shiny silver forehead, seems blandly satisfied with his malformation. The work of Annette Rosenshine, together with economically modeled portraits of interesting people by Hugo Gellert, will be at Neumann's Print Room until April 17.

In Exhibition at the Ainslee Gallery.

"Sea Gulls," by T. E. Fassett.

The Soul of the Subject.

ERNEST FIENE discovers the intrinsic nature of his subject. Heavy poppies look as if they had drunk their own sweet poison, while hothouse flowers are as crisp and fragile as maiden-hair. In "Rondout" there is the fussy ado of little waterside huts and busy tugboats. The "Brick Factory" has a larger energy. These various states of mind are concisely stated. Spacious, sweeping design runs through all the water-colors. Ernest Fiene—The Rhen Galleries.

***

Paintings of Flowers.

DURING the war Henry Farré was an official painter, attached to the French Ministry. At that time he held an exhibition of his work in camouflage. He is in reality a painter of flowers, of perky parrots and ruffled kittens. There is no camouflage here. The artist has a breezy manner of painting. He puts the subject down onto a glass table top that affords pleasant tingling reflections. Henry Farré—The Ehrich Galleries—Closes April 21.

***

Greenwich House.

SCULPTURE, painting and crafts by Greenwich Village artists will be on exhibition at Greenwich House until April 18. The purpose of the exhibition, apparently, is to bring the Art Department to the attention of the public, as much as it is to exhibit familiar work by well-known artists. The artists have been generous, sending noteworthy contributions.

Greenwich House has established an art department among its many community activities. Mr. Salvatore and his associates are guides to the young people of the neighborhood. They have adopted the atelier method of instruction. Students work in the shop of the master, share in the inspiration of his companionship and profit by the example of his work.

The Art Department has for three years maintained a woodcarving shop, with its accompanying instruction in drawing and modelling. The pottery work is under the direction of Miss Maude Robinson. Drawing and design classes are held by Miss Mary Carpenter and a life class is led by Charles Hawthorne.

***

Brooklyn Museum Exhibits.

THE Brooklyn Museum announces that, beginning April 7, its print galleries will be occupied by two new exhibitions. The first of these is a collection of drawings, lithographs and etchings by two Scandinavian artists, Mons Breidvik and Uno Stallarholm.

Mons Breidvik is a Norwegian painter living in this country. Several of his paintings were shown at the Brooklyn Museum in the recent exhibition by Scandinavian American artists and the forthcoming exhibition includes about forty-five of his drawings, lithographs, &c. Uno Stallarholm is a Swedish artist who has never visited this country. He is principally known as an etcher and has exhibited in the galleries of Stockholm and Copenhagen.

The second exhibition consists of a large group of poster and design studies made in the natural history hall of the Brooklyn Museum by the senior art classes of Pratt Institute under the supervision of Ernest W. Watson, William L. Longyear and Miss Mary B. Hyde. The museum has in the past presented several exhibitions of posters by American and foreign artists, but the use of natural history specimens as an inspiration for artistic design carries this phase of art into new fields.

The exhibitions will remain on view until April 28.

***

The Crafts.

THE Guild of Thread and Needle Workers is holding an exhibition in the New York gallery of the Boston Society of Arts and Crafts. It will be open until April 10. The members have made exquisite and faultless copies of old designs, or have adopted historic ornament. The bulletin issued by the society says:

"Unfortunately much of that found originally in Colonial settings has been lost or destroyed, and the decorator, seeking ever to reproduce the charm of early homes, needs fitting substitutes that cannot be supplied by machine-made fabrics." One would like to see some of the tireless energy that has gone into this amazing craftsmanship put to designing for the contemporary as well as for the Colonial home. Miss Mildred Morell and Mrs. Elizabeth A. Goodwin have gone furthest in developing styles of their own.

***

Some members of the Potter's Shop are inherently artists, far too sensitive to dispense with the spirit of their own time at the bidding of a commercial outsider. Certainly they have investigated the history of their craft, for the sake of their art. But occasionally their work seems to have been built out of something more substantial than the materials of an artisan whose eyes see no further than the copy. The potter's ingenuity might apply itself beyond eternal pots, candlesticks and tiles. Some one has suggested doorknobs.

***

Hunt Diederich has never separated his craft from his art. He, too, is now doing pottery—dishes for the wall rather than for the table. The themes are familiar: long-legged, thin-waisted beasts with proud heads. He has been able to transpose the theme to this new medium and circular shape. Particularly interesting is a whitish horse on a brownish ground. The exhibition at the Feragil Galleries will continue until April 17.

***

Other Exhibitions.

WARREN DAHLER is showing screens and decorations at the interior decoration shop of Amy Richards Colton. Sailing ships are his happiest subject. He seems not so much to plan their placing as to dot them about the surface in a casual and entertaining fashion. He uses a metal back of dull finish, which enriches the lighting without allowing it to become unpleasantly shiny.

***

This year, Durand-Ruel has chosen Albert André for Spring. The paintings are as clear and warm as one would like to see all Spring days; as pleasant as his own pink roses against their blue wall. The atmosphere in "Vue de Mantes" may be a little moist—at this season one passes it, in spite of the charm of its close values, to enjoy the sunbaked clarity of Laudun or Bagnols.

***

Mildred M. Coughlin's etchings are drenched in sun. She seems to have had rare good fortune, and has been able to light her subject without compromising either the sun or the design. These are street scenes, for the most part, solidly and clearly drawn. The exhibition at the Art Centre will continue until April 17.

BARNARD HAS GREEK FESTIVAL

Games Resembling Those of Antiquity Include Discus-Throwing And a Chariot Race With Girls as Horses

BARNARD COLLEGE turns once a year from the confusion of twentieth century New York to the calm atmosphere of ancient Greece. Every Spring a day is set aside for the celebration of a Grecian festival. Reaching back through centuries, the gap is bridged between the topless towers of Manhattan and the low sweeping hills of Athens.

Gone now is every trace of modernity from the college. The draped robe and the classic head-dress once more claim feminine favor. The gods have forsaken Mount Olympus. You will find them reigning instead on a campus.

"Greek Games" is the festival's authentic title. True emphasis belongs on the elated spirit that characterizes them. This spirit animates contests in athletics, lyrics, chorus and dancing.

This revival came about in a casual fashion. Back in 1903 one sophomore said in another: "Wouldn't it be fun to have some Olympian games? We have no athletics at all." The answer was: "Let's go and see Emily about it."

It is to be presumed that Emily, whoever she may have been, was in favor. Doubtless the fact that a mild form of bicycling constituted the principal athletics of the day irked her. The result, at any rate, was a crude form of classic contest. These first seeds fell on fertile ground and bloomed in time into the fully developed games of today, to be celebrated this year on April 17.

Athletics Are Prominent.

A prominent place is given to athletics. The games are presented in the form of a contest between freshman and sophomore classes. A traditional challenge is flung out by the sophomores: "Hear, oh, ye Younglings! We elder ones challenge you to a contest. * * *" The freshmen take up the challenge, and competition ensues. The athletic events include discus throwing, hurdling, torch and chariot racing.

It is a moving spectacle. Greek youths with short tunics and flashing legs strive valiantly for laurel wreaths, the treasured symbols of success. These wreaths crown the heads of modern victors as they crowned the victors of classic days.

Speed and sureness of pace do not alone constitute victory. There must be true classic form in every event. The discus throwers swing wide their arms and let fly the discus. Straight and free, with arms flung to the sides, athletes sweep over the hurdles. They are lithe and tense, in control of every muscle. The flaming torch is held high as it is passed on from runner to runner. The flame must not be extinguished.

Not until the breathless chariot race is run can the athletic program be called complete. Four high-blooded equines, who on more ordinary days are modern college girls, pull a chariot garlanded and gay. One chariot flaunts colors of blue, silver and flame; the other is tinted jade green and flecked with gold. They whirl around the race course. All depends upon the horses. They paw and prance. They gallop, tossing their bobbed heads. The charioteer, with cracking whip, sweeps to victory with cries of "Nike! Nike!"

Dances and Choruses.

But the athletics, although picturesque and appealing, are not the only aspect of Greek games. Another side is intensely serious. The rollicking sport of the races gives way to a sympathetic presentation of dances, choruses and lyrics. Every year one god is singled out from the rest of the Olympian throng to be the presiding deity. To him priestesses are dedicated and invocations made. His is the spirit that is felt moving through the dance and songs. In this age of competition there is great rivalry. Certain ancient deities prove better able to fire youthful imaginations than do others. These are chosen again and again. The Greek god who can count himself a twentieth century favorite is indeed a success.

Leto's famous twins, Apollo and Diana, have always held their own. Prometheus, the fire bringer; Poseidon, the earth shaker, and the swift messenger Hermes (this year's selection) have many victories to their credit. Once the god is chosen, every preparation is made for his comfort and happiness during his twenty-four hours' stay in Barnard.

Classic Stories Told.

Moments of artistic value concern themselves with the dramatic presentation of a story, either a Greek myth or an original incident woven around the lives of gods and mortals. The execution of these stories is of interest to any one concerned with the possibilities of mob action. There is little individual work.

These stories gain dramatic strength and intensity in the acting. The atmosphere is heightened by the presence of a chorus which intones a song in keeping with the theme represented. If the theme be gay, the chant is light and winsome. If the tale be one of a revengeful god and of a cringing people, the lament is low and mournful.

All colors are used in the short tunics of the men and the graceful robes of the women. Purples and grays, relieved by flashing scarlet, constitute the color scheme of one class this year. Soft blues and greens contrasted with henna and blood orange make an effective contrast. Every effort is made to preserve a harmonious whole.

BLIND PEOPLE FOUND EAGER FOR TALES THAT CONTAIN ADVENTURE

THE Searchlight, a magazine published in Braille for the juvenile blind, is now entering its sixteenth year. It is issued four times a year, free of charge, by the New York Association for the Blind, 111 East Fifty-ninth Street. Besides having a national distribution the magazine is sent to the Philippine Islands, Japan and the Panama Canal Zone.

"It was in answer to the plea of a little blind girl in a public school that The Searchlight was first printed," said Miss Helen Day, editor-in-chief. Miss Day is both blind and deaf.

"The letter from this little girl requested that a paper be written by the New York Association for the Blind 'just for blind children who could not read other stories.' The Searchlight has kept to its original character of stories for children. Letters to the editor sent in by readers are published. An educational article on natural geography or geographic history and a fairy story are published in every copy.

"The greatest demand from youthful readers seems to be for adventurous tales. Sometimes a serial running for several numbers is used; at other times stories for the very young and also poems, jokes and riddles. It is a difficult problem to satisfy all tastes, for our readers range from 6 to 20 years, with a few who are middle aged.

"Material for The Searchlight is selected from other periodicals and books. In many cases the editor writes the stories. The magazine is sent in manuscript form to be embossed into Braille by a blind society in Ohio. The New York Association for the Blind then sends the copies to its readers. The Braille copy of The Searchlight is about twelve by fifteen inches and weighs eight ounces. It goes through the mails free of postage."

Braille type is the universal print used by the blind. It is a series of raised dots arranged in a combination such as the Morse code. Books embossed in Braille, of course, are much larger and heavier than those regularly printed in ink.

In 30 Seconds
Open to the sunshine or closed against the storm

THE Studebaker Duplex gives you in one car the advantages of both an open and an enclosed car. There's a thrill in driving it as an open car that no closed car can ever give you. Thousands of open-car enthusiasts, forced for a time to sacrifice open-car enjoyment because of the inconvenient, unwieldy side-curtain arrangement, have now become Duplex owners.

Open or closed in 30 seconds

Smartly finished roller side enclosures are concealed in the top—out of sight—ready at a moment's notice to be drawn, giving you complete protection from rain, storm or cold winds. In 30 seconds the airy open Duplex becomes the snug enclosed Duplex. It's as easy as lowering the shades in your home. And just as easily, when the storm is over, the enclosures again roll up out of sight. No need to stop even for a minute, no need to leave your seat and search for the old-type, flapping side curtains while you and your guests are exposed to the weather. The Studebaker Duplex has made the old-fashioned touring car obsolete.

Unlike the old-style touring car—the Studebaker Duplex has a sturdily built upper structure, an integral part of the body. Thus, in addition to double comfort, the Duplex offers double safety. The upper structure is built so strongly that it will support the entire weight of the car in an upside down position. Time and again, since this revolutionary type of body was pioneered by Studebaker, it has proved its sturdiness by saving lives in accidents which would have been fatal in the old style, light top touring car.

Duplex leads quality open-car sales

So obvious are the advantages of the Duplex that it has swept Studebaker into a dominant position of leadership among all open cars selling above $1000. Last year almost half of the open cars sold in the Studebaker price class—were Studebaker Duplexes. That's because it's the only car on earth that combines open-car freedom, closed-car protection, comfort, convenience, smart appearance and safety!

Studebaker Standard Six Duplex-Phaeton $1145
World's most powerful car of its size and weight — f. o. b. factory

According to the rating of the Society of Automotive Engineers the Studebaker Standard Six Duplex-Phaeton, illustrated above, is the world's most powerful car of its size and weight. 24 five-passenger touring cars have less rated horsepower, yet sell for $5 to $505 more than the Standard Six Duplex-Phaeton.

It is built to hold five passengers in real comfort. Seats are luxuriously deep and restful. Upholstery is genuine leather. Lights are operated from the steering wheel. Spark control is automatic. Complete equipment includes gasoline gauge on the dash, automatic windshield cleaner, rear-view mirror, cowl ventilator, stop light, air cleaner, gas and oil filters and coincidental lock to steering gear and ignition controlled by the same key used for the lock on spare-tire carrier.

Only Studebaker builds the Duplex—only Studebaker with its enormous One-Profit facilities can build it and sell it completely equipped, at the price of the old style open touring car.

Studebaker's unique facilities

Few motor car "manufacturers" have foundries, forges, etc., to make their own engines—yet one-fifth of an automobile's cost is in the engine. Even fewer build their own bodies—yet one-third of a car's cost is in the body.

Studebaker builds all its own bodies, all engines, all clutches, gear sets, springs, differentials, steering gears, brakes, axles, gray-iron castings and drop forgings. Only Studebaker in the fine-car field enjoys such complete manufacturing facilities.

One-Profit value

These facilities enable Studebaker to manufacture quality cars on a One-Profit basis—eliminating outside profits. The savings thus effected are passed on to Studebaker owners in the form of higher quality and lower price.

Studebaker facilities result, too, in cars designed, engineered and built as units. The hundreds of parts in a Studebaker function as a smooth-working unit, resulting in scores of thousands of miles of excess transportation, greater riding comfort and higher resale value.

Always kept up-to-date

Direct manufacturing control enables Studebaker to keep cars constantly up-to-date. We add improvements regardless of the calendar—we do not save them up for spectacular annual announcements which make cars artificially obsolete. For a complete illustrated story of One-Profit manufacture and for a beautiful colored catalog of Standard Six Studebakers, drop a postal or a letter to The Studebaker Corporation of America, South Bend, Ind. REVISING THE DRY LAW

A Demand That the Voters Be Heard Through State Conventions—New York Referendum Attacked

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The questionnaire of the press on the prohibition problem, at least in this environment, dealt largely with irrelevancies and did not afford the voter an opportunity to express himself on the fundamental issue, shall the Eighteenth Amendment stand or shall it be repealed? Unless this point is settled once and for all the liquor question will never be settled. Congress should redeem itself and offer at once to the voters of the nation what Congress originally denied, namely, the constitutional privilege of the voter to be heard directly through the medium of ratifying State conventions. The liquor question has become so obviously acute and vicious, the voters in such definite disagreement, that undue delay will cause increasing chaos and tragedy.

Up to this time the Congressional prerogative of option in respect to the passing down of amendments has invariably been exercised in one way, namely, the procedure of ratifying State Legislatures, and the preference of Congress has consistently clung to the ancient precedent, but the habit could have hardly attained the strength it now has if for many years the governing class of politicians had not purposely wished to avoid direct action on changes in the Federal Constitution.

One sometimes wonders whether any Congressman has ever thoughtfully and conscientiously studied the text of the Constitution.

Let not any United States Senator carp at State Legislatures for their constitutional derelictions respecting the treatment of the suffrage and prohibition amendments. The primal wrong, the initial error, was with Congress itself. Congress completely ignored the intent and purpose of the Constitution as set up by its makers, and, paradoxical as it may seem, this great failure of the Congress of the United States to carry out the spirit of the Constitution was completely overlooked by an exacting, scrutinizing press and by all leaders of public thought in the nation.

The Constitution as it now stands covers the amending power in a much better and more constructive manner than has yet been suggested, by withholding, as it should withhold, the control of amendments under representative government in the Congress, where the deliberative discretion should rest as originally and widely intended in respect to the kind of an amendment that should be passed down to State Legislatures, and the kind of an amendment that should go to popular State conventions, which, in fact, would be merely automatic bodies functioning perfunctorily through pledged delegates sent by the people. To be sure there would be much grandiloquence and superfluous persuasiveness from the convention floor, with an abundance of cheers and sobs from the gallery, but it is inconceivable that any advocate for prohibition at a State convention would vote contrary to his former utterances and cast his ballot in reality other than in the manner of a Presidential Elector and ever hope again to maintain his personal equilibrium in society.

The convention would consider one subject and not many; the responsibility would be obvious and not confused as is the case with State Legislatures. With an amendment to the Constitution that would send every kind of an amendment directly to the people with no consideration whatever as to whether the subject was complex or simple, the basic law of the land and the welfare of the nation would be eternally jeopardized by the passing whims and caprices of an unlimited electorate too frequently indifferent to worthy candidates, not to mention involved and abstruse laws.

Decades passed without an amendment to the Constitution, and restless, radical students of government not many years ago feared that the inhibitions to constitutional changes were insurmountable; but with the facilitation of modern journalism, the telegraph, the telephone, the wireless, coupled with the rapidly increasing suffrage privileges, the speed and frequency of amendments in recent years must have been disillusioning.

It sometimes seems that, in these days of direct action by the voter, the people act directly upon many things that they should not act upon, and that they do not act directly upon some things that they should act upon.

Let it be noted that things and people are moving mighty swiftly nowadays. Milton prophesied centuries ago in "Paradise Regained" that the world would come to an end when the people of the world move to and fro freely. Most of us, however, have not come to believe him, but if he were right, judging by one's eyes, that day is not distant.

Making Prohibition Sentiment.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Any one discouraged by what may seem failure of our Federal prohibition law should recall the history of prohibition in Kansas. As a one-time resident of that State I have a very vivid remembrance of the fact that about ten years after the adoption of prohibition we passed through a period of reaction identical with what we have now. Bootlegging was rife, especially in the larger towns and along the Missouri border. Even temperance people were alarmed and questioned whether prohibition could ever be made a success. Many were advocating resubmission. A considerable minority in each of the political parties was secretly working to get resubmissionists into the Legislature. One old well-meaning Governor became so obsessed with pessimistic sentiment that he ceased to make any effort at law enforcement, arguing that nothing could be done until there was more favorable public sentiment. The outlook was gloomy, indeed. But, fortunately, at this juncture we elected as his successor a man who adopted as his slogan, "Make public sentiment by executing the law." And that was what he did. He was a man not afraid of his shadow, and his administration completely turned the tide. That was a memorable episode in the history of Kansas. Kansans today have "prohibition that prohibits" and they are proud of the fact.

This, as I see it, is the only feasible course to be pursued today. We want public sentiment, and the way to get it is to enforce the law. Of course, it is slow and difficult work at the first, requiring patience and courage, but it will become easier as time passes and public sentiment will become so strong that the voice of the enemy will be no more heard.

The New York Proposal.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Apparently the enemies of prohibition are making their last-ditch stand on the proposition, as expressed in the proposed New York State referendum, "Shall the Congress of the United States modify the Federal act to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States so that the same shall not prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation or exportation of beverages which are not in fact intoxicating, as determined in accordance with the laws of the respective States?" A similar resolution failed of passage in the New Jersey Legislature, and one of Senator Edge's numerous wet bills in the United States Senate is of like character.

An amended Volstead law, leaving undefined the phrase "intoxicating liquor" as prohibited by the Constitution, would be a travesty of law and of justice, because it would require, first, a legal demonstration of the word "intoxicating," and, second, proof that the liquids made, sold or transported are in fact intoxicating in each individual case before a competent tribunal before a warrant could issue, and again in open court in the prosecution of each individual bootlegger. The plan is a clever one whereby to tie the hands of justice and permit bootleggers, rum-runners and moonshiners to run riot without fear of lawful interference.

The definition in the Volstead act is one of legal construction, not of scientific analysis, as explained by Justice Brandeis in the case of Ruppert vs. Caffry. The learned Justice says: "For the legislation and decisions of the highest courts of nearly all the States establishes that it is deemed impossible to effectively enforce either prohibitory or other laws merely regulating the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, if liability or inclusion within the law is made to depend on the issuable fact whether or not a particular liquor made or sold as a beverage is intoxicating."

His Honor then argues that a legal definition is necessary forbidding certain specific or generic liquors, such as whisky, rum, brandy, gin, wine or beer, and covering any others by an alcoholic content maximum, such as one-half of 1 per centum by volume.

That is exactly what the Volstead law does. Section 1, and it will be noticed that the language used is, "The word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor' shall be construed to include alcohol, brandy," &c. It is and has been common knowledge, since the dawn of history, that wine and beer are in fact intoxicating liquors; and it was, therefore, not straining the fact to so "construe" them in the legal definition.

It was the practice in Federal and State prosecutions of liquor cases to so construe these beverages long before the Eighteenth Amendment.

Again, nothing could be more farcical than the proposition to have Congress leave to the State Legislatures the right to define the meaning of an article in the Constitution. Under such construction New York might declare that naturally fermented wine, 14 per cent. alcohol, is not intoxicating; New Jersey might stand for the exemption of 45 per cent. spirits, and Massachusetts might draw the line at 5 per cent. beer, whereas in the South and West the statutes as now might conform to the Federal law. This would make confusion worse confounded, with the battleground along the State frontiers and in the courts.

CANADA'S TELEPHONE FAME

Brantford Makes Special Claims to Be Remembered On the Anniversary of the Invention

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In connection with the recent celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of a room-to-room telephone conversation in Boston, I think you will agree that it is only fair to record the precedent circumstances of that notable event. Graham Bell, when a young man, came to Canada with his father and mother from London, England, in the hope that a more bracing climate might insure the restoration to health of Graham, then very fragile and the only remaining son, two brothers having previously passed away. The family located at this place, Brantford, Ontario, Canada, and the father purchased a suburban residence overlooking the Grand River Valley. Here the son used to swing in a hammock slung between two trees, winning back health and planning what was afterward to become the world-famous telephone.

In later life he visited the old home at various periods, and it was my privilege on such occasions, along with others, to meet him and to talk over the early incidents of the invention. His first experiments here were thought to have been eccentric and did not meet with any response except incredulity. It would be too long a task to describe them in this communication; suffice it to say that it was decided some years ago in Brantford, known throughout Canada as "The Telephone City," to erect a memorial to Bell and the telephone, and the preliminary steps were taken with the full concurrence and endorsation of the distinguished inventor. The sum of $65,000 was raised, contributions coming from the Dominion and Provincial Governments and from private sources, the contributors including some associates in the United States who knew from Bell the early story of the phone. The amount was not only sufficient to erect the monument, but also to purchase the old home on Tutela Heights, which was deeded to the city as a public property and is now visited by many hundreds each year. The judges of the monument designs, submitted by many sculptors, were Senator Davis, Buffalo; Sir Byron E. Walker, Toronto, and Sir G. C. Gibbons, London. The memorial was unveiled on Oct. 24, 1917, by the Duke of Devonshire, then Governor General of Canada. Graham Bell and members of his family were present, and during the course of a speech made by the inventor he said:

"I have looked very carefully over the history of the telephone with the object of seeing just what had been done in Brantford and what in Boston, and I am prepared to state that Brantford is right in claiming the invention of the telephone here."

He added that the telephone was "conceived in Brantford in 1874," and continued:

"But this great industry must base its success upon a patent. Now that patent—the most valuable patent ever granted by the Patent Office—was not written by the Patent Office solicitor; it was written by me. The specification was written by me and the first draft of that specification was made in Brantford, in September, 1875, and it is the same application that afterward became the patent upon which the telephone industry is based."

He closed his speech as follows:

"I wish to say, on behalf of the Bell Telephone Memorial Association, I have great pleasure in presenting to his Excellency [Duke of Devonshire] a silver telephone, and I hope that in using this he will remember that the telephone originated in Brantford and that the first transmission to a distance was made here between Brantford and Paris. [Paris, it may be noted, is a town some eight miles from here.] We had the transmitting instrument in Brantford and the receiving instrument in Paris, so that you could talk from Brantford to Paris, but you could not talk back. We had to telegraph back by another line. That was the condition of affairs, so you must not claim too much. It was the first transmission at a distance, but it was not the first reciprocal conversation over a line. That was held in Boston, Oct. 9, 1876."

The report of this speech was taken by a court stenographer.

I may further add that, knowing I was writing an article with regard to the inception of the telephone, Graham Bell, some years ago, sent me a volume, containing the complete report of the evidence when the Bell patent was challenged before the Circuit Court of the United States in 1887. In that volume, page 76, there is this question and answer:

"Question—When and where did you begin to prepare the specification for the application which resulted in the issue of patent No. 174,465 of March 7, 1876?

"Answer—I commenced writing the specification in Canada at my father's house, in September, 1875."

It should be further explained that Mr. Bell left Brantford to teach in Boston, and during the completion of the phone, after its inception here, divided much of his time between the two places.

WAR ON WILD LIFE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It gave me keen pleasure to read Monday's editorial on the fox hunt in the Pound Ridge Reservation, and to notice that you mentioned that predatory animals are not only valuable in themselves, but have very definite duties in the scheme of nature. The trouble lies far deeper, however, than this little shoot, for the movement is not local, but national, and not only are foxes the victims. The sportsmen of this country, through their numerous organizations, and aided by some ammunition manufacturers, are waging organized warfare against many of our most beautiful forms of wild life; almost anything that, through the laxity of the law, may be legally killed is dubbed "vermin" and cheerfully hounded to death in organized shoots. This includes the bald eagle, all the hawks, the great majority of which have been proved beneficial by the Biological Survey; the owls, chiefly killers of mice; crows, and even herons and kingfishers.

The worst aspect of the situation is that these movements are growing in strength, and that the wild life protective associations steadfastly refuse to combat them, apparently for fear of antagonizing the sporting interests.

FILIPINO ZEAL FOR FREEDOM

Latest Moves in the Campaign for Independence—America to Be Reminded of Her Promises

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Sunday, March 21, 1926, you printed an article by Nicholas Roosevelt claiming that the Filipino leaders have lost their zeal for independence.

As I think that the article does not give a fair and true account of the facts and gives a wrong impression to the public, I desire to rectify the statements and give my view of the situation. There is no justification for the claim made in the article that the Filipino leaders have lost their zeal for independence. Quite the contrary. The latest reports from the Philippines give the following evidence of the increased enthusiasm and the renewed zeal and vigor on the part of the Filipino people and their leaders for political freedom:

First, a supreme national council has recently been formed through the coalition of the two political parties, the Nacionalista and the Democrata, showing the latest concrete evidence that the parties in the islands are not in any way divided on the question of Philippine independence.

The purpose of the council is to "wage a persistent fight for our independence within the limits of peace and order, and to avail itself of all constitutional guarantees that can be taken advantage of to win our coveted freedom."

Second, there is an increasing manifestation of financial support of the independence campaign by officials, citizens, and institutions of all classes. A year or so ago when Insular Auditor Wright suspended the million peso appropriation for the independence commission, a popular financial campaign for 500,000 pesos was speedily oversubscribed and supported by almost all the people in all regions of the archipelago. That record is even now being exceeded, judging from the support pledged by not only the legislators but also private citizens, public school teachers, Government officials, and the members of organizations, such as the Philippine Columbian Association, to contribute regularly for the work of the council from 5 to 10 per cent. of their income, to be increased to any amount in case necessary.

Third, to disprove the false report that the agitation for independence comes only from a few self-seeking politicians and not from a real desire by the people, a bill was passed by the Philippine Legislature calling for a plebiscite on the question of independence. This was, however, vetoed by General Wood. Even Mr. Roosevelt, the writer of the article, admits that were such a plebiscite held tomorrow, the whole people would unquestionably vote for complete and immediate independence.

In view of these and other facts, it is a mere figment of the imagination to claim that the zeal for independence on the part of the Filipino leaders is declining.

The next claim of the writer that the wisest of the Filipino leaders admit privately that the islands are not yet ready for independence is likewise devoid of proof.

Because neither the names of these so-called wisest leaders nor their statements could be mentioned, the writer hides under the excuse that they do not wish to be quoted and then expects his readers to believe him. While I was Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Manila for four years I came in contact with those considered among the foremost and wisest leaders of my country who are layman leaders of the association. I found no such discrepancy between their private sincere beliefs and their public declarations. The very claim made by Mr. Roosevelt that the men he refers to do not have the courage to express their convictions, whatever the cost, disproves that they are really "the wisest of the leaders."

But even if Mr. Roosevelt and Professor Jenks should persuade us, in spite of ourselves, that such private declarations have really been made to them, should that in any way minimize the fitness and readiness of the Filipino people for self-government or justify America's ignoring her promise to the Philippines? As The Nation, in its issue of March 24, 1926, claims, "John Adams said that about one-third of the Colonists opposed the Revolution at every stage, and it is worth remembering that George III had extended to the Colonies no such official promise of freedom as we have given to the islands." The fact is that the vast majority of the Filipino people are in favor of immediate independence, as testified by Governor Wood himself in the report submitted by the Woods-Forbes commission in 1921 to President Harding, which says: "We find everywhere among the Christian Filipinos the desire for independence, generally under the protection of the United States." The Moros and other non-Christian peoples are not, as erroneously reported, opposed to independence, for they support Hadji Butu, Moro Senator and leader, who said: "The Moros are one with the rest of the Filipinos." Even if opposition by some non-Christians is granted, they constitute at most only 500,000 out of 12,000,000, and not 10 per cent. of the population, as erroneously reported by Mr. Roosevelt. But is unanimity a requisite to national freedom? Has it been forgotten that the Tories opposed the struggle for freedom by the original thirteen American colonies? Was not the Declaration of Independence opposed in many regions? Was the Constitution of the United States unanimously adopted?

The Filipino people fear that the question of Philippine-American relations is being decided solely on the basis of dollars and cents. They pinned their hope on the promise made by the American Nation in 1916 and hitherto have had faith that America will fulfill her promise. But those who look upon the Philippines only as a source of sugar, rubber and tobacco are now advocating that the United States disregard her own sacred promise, the pledges of her own Presidents and betray her own ideals embodied in the Declaration of Independence.

EXCERPTS FROM LETTERS ON MANY SUBJECTS

Powers of the States.

In your today's issue Representative Hamilton Fish Jr. is quoted as saying in his letter opposing a referendum on the liquor question:

"The proposed liquor referendum is a reversion to the Democratic doctrine of State's rights, upon which issue the Civil War was fought, the Southern States claiming the right to defy the Federal laws, the Constitution and secede from the Union."

Why "reversion"? Why "Democratic"? Since when have the States lost, or abandoned, the rights not only guaranteed them, but also imposed upon them by the Constitution of the United States? To what political party does the President belong who, but a few months ago, publicly cautioned the States against an apparent tendency to surrender their powers to the General Government? • • • In what manner, where and when, did the Southern States "claim the right to defy the Federal laws, the Constitution"? Did not the Constitution specifically recognize the existence of slavery and provide in unmistakable terms for the rendition of fugitive slaves? What States were they which by "personal liberty laws" not only did "defy the Federal laws, the Constitution," but actually nullified the provisions of those laws, that Constitution?

JAY ZORN.

New York, April 4, 1926.

From a Volunteer.

So that I may no longer be classed among those who have been so "strangely inarticulate," I must express with what great pleasure I read that finely worded letter of Frederick W. Peabody's, produced in your columns of today's issue supporting cancellation of war debts.

I would be proud if I could add anything to it, and it would be a presumption for me to attempt it, so wonderfully well has he expressed the feelings of all true Americans. The same feeling of pride in our country came to me when reading it that was mine when we, even at such a late date, joined our associates, and I was privileged to volunteer for service.

I am as heartily in accord with all that Mr. Peabody writes as I was unalterably opposed to a bonus. What I did with countless others it was our privilege to so do, without the slightest thought or desire for any recompense whatsoever.

I wish that this letter could go into every hamlet of our late associates so that they might know how we Americans really feel upon this subject.

A. C. PALMER.

Phi Beta Kappa Honors.

To an unbiased observer, one who was not fortunate enough to be able to go to college, it might seem that the professor in the University of Chicago who is quoted in your columns indulged in a bit of inaccurate generalization when, first, he classified "grinds" alone as the winners of highest scholastic honors; next, in his statement, "the most successful men in the business and professional worlds were never at the foot of their allotted work with ease and might regard themselves stigmatized were the price demanded for such pleasant result the abstention from a full quota of athletic, social and off-campus activities. As my own child, Alice, Wellesley, 1926, wrote last week in reference to her election as a member, "According to my preconceived notions, those chosen are of two groups: the 'grinds' who have devoted themselves to intellectual pursuits; then one says, 'she would!'; the other, those who have been especially prominent in extra-curricular activities and are rewarded with an extra laurel, which brings the exclamation 'how wonderful!' Not having been either • • •" &c. Of these in business and professional life who have been regarded as worthy of listing in the publication, "Who's Who," not only is it true that a relatively insignificant number of those whose names appear have been without benefit of higher education but evidence is afforded that those who ranked highest in their college work constitute, taken together, a disproportionately large part of the total.

Still a Debtor?

Your issue of April 3 carries a letter from Frederick W. Peabody in which he denounces the policy of demanding the cash settlement of war debts. The only advocates of this policy, says Mr. Peabody, are soulless politicians. If the question was left to the great body of our people, the debts would be wiped out by a receipt in full.

Now I beg to assure Mr. Peabody that there are many others besides "soulless politicians" who oppose cancellation of war debts. They oppose it on the ground that the debtors are not as poor as they profess to be, and the creditor is not as rich as is usually claimed. The much exploited claim that we are a creditor nation to the extent of some $20,000,000,000 is just a monumental fake. It is nearer the other way. In an article in The New York Sun some two years Mr. Thomas F. Woodlock stated that we were "a debtor nation and likely to remain so for many years to come."

I have made this same statement in a number of articles in The American Economist and have called upon the creditor nation exploiters to answer, but up to the present time not one of them has taken up the challenge.

Eastern Churches.

The communication made to The Times by the Rev. Mr. Haydn of Watervliet, N. Y., on misuse of the term "Greek Catholic" as applied to Russian Orthodox Christian does not seem to prove anything. Mr. Haydn ignores the fact that many Russian Orthodox have substituted "ecumenical" for "Catholic" in their creed.

An Episcopalian clergyman, the Rev. S. C. Hughson ("What is the Episcopal Church?"), flatly contradicts the statement made by Mr. Haydn. Mr. Hughson writes:

"We find that nowhere in the great of the Protestant Episcopal Church employs "Orthodox" to designate non-Catholic Russians and reserves "Greek Catholic" for Catholics of the Byzantine rite. This usage may or may not be true to dogma. It is, nevertheless, the usage of every reasonable person—Catholic, Orthodox and Episcopalian.

Inequalities of the Income Tax.

The income tax penalizes efficiency, industry and thrift, and thereby indirectly rewards laziness, incompetence and waste. The man who earns $3,000 and spends $3,500 is evidently an injury to the country. He is not taxed. The man who earns $6,000 and spends $3,500 has added $2,500 to the country's wealth and to that extent has promoted its prosperity. Tax him, the villain! He works too hard. He is irritating to the rest of us, who are figuring not on what we can do for the country but on what we can get out of it. The income tax penalizes honesty and rewards dishonesty. For every well-informed person knows that the idea that the income tax cannot be evaded is pure bunk. In some cases it cannot, but in many it can. The income tax has bred a horde of inquisitors, many of them incompetent, whose business it is to try to convict every income taxpayer of being a thief, with the result that they catch a few thieves and cause honest men a tremendous amount of annoyance and work. In some cases their activities do not fall far short of persecution. The income tax throws on banks, trust companies, brokers, corporations, &c., a vast amount of detail work for which they receive no compensation. The income tax favors certain classes. Take the farmer who consumes, let us say, $1,500 worth of his own products during the year. Does he report this $1,500 as a part of his income? By no means. But the wage earner, who cannot consume what he himself produces, but who has to earn the $1,500 and then turn around and spend it for the farmer's products, has to report it as income. Take the professional man, whose income, though large, comes in small amounts from a large number of different persons. The Government has no means of checking his returns. And there are many other inequalities.

Speed Limits.

It was gratifying to read in last Sunday's Times that the city authorities are increasing the speed limits on various highways from fifteen to twenty-five miles per hour. I have owned and driven an automobile for the past fifteen years. The speed limit signs on Ocean Parkway, limiting speed to fifteen miles, with the words "strict enforcement," and the signs on 138th Street, limiting the speed to eight miles an hour, are very obnoxious to me. I can assure you that I have no desire to speed but, on the contrary, I drive quite slowly. In my experience, the posting of these signs has not had any tendency to decrease speeding, and is considered by a great majority of automobile owners the privilege of expressing my resentment against the extortion, by various individuals, of sums of money from automobile owners who park their cars during theatre hours in streets in the theatrical district? I doubt whether there is an automobile owner who does not have to pay to these parasites, who are anywhere from the age of 12 upward, just because they hang around in certain streets and know that the automobile owner is helpless.

Lord Riddell on Wilson.

It is rather amusing to see how contradictory are some of the accusations against the War President, called by many a pacifist. Europe gasped at the efficient rapidity displayed by the United States Government in placing three million soldiers in France, and now Lord Riddell discovers that as War Minister Wilson was not a success. Another glaring contradiction, to be gathered from his Lordship's pious whitewashing of one who always strove to be fair, is that Wilson, when in Europe, carried with him the mistaken conception that Englishmen were arrogant, self-seeking, domineering and crafty; while during the same World War the imputation was repeatedly made against him by pro-Germans that he was but a subservient tool in the hands of England. From such a tremendous tangle of contradictions future generations will find it a difficult task to estimate Woodrow Wilson's true character, but they will be guided by his writings, not as the product of a gifted phrasemaker, as Lloyd George is reported to have called him, but as the exposition of a lofty mind whose vision and aim they will be able to appreciate better than we do today.

Slow Cure for Crime.

Crime commissions may catalogue crimes but they cannot eliminate them. One term seems to cover all the secondary causes of crime. That term is human badness. Criminality is a product of the human mind. It has a spiritual and not a material origin. It manifests itself in many kinds of overt acts, but they all spring from the same cause. The germ of criminality must be sought where it is, namely, in the human heart and will. Its habitat is the inner and not the outer man. Reformers have vainly tried to find it in economic conditions, in industrial opportunity, in financial advantage, and find, as Emerson says, that they have only medicated the symptoms. Evidently, crime cannot be checked by the means that have so far been tried. There is no short cut to the elimination of crime. The sure but slow procedure is the injunction of Solomon, "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it." There is no other way and this one has never been tried. Human nature is opposed to this plan; the practices of society are against it; conventional philanthropy blocks its progress; the whole legal structure, both by what it does and by what it leaves undone, helps

YUGOSLAVIA AND SALONIKI

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just read the article by M. Polyzoides in The New York Times on the Serbian Free Zone in the Port of Saloniki. M. Polyzoides is evidently of opinion that because only 11.77 per cent. of the total export trade passes through Saloniki, the interests of the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes in that port are of little importance. It is, however, this very fact that justifies the complaints of the Yugoslav commercial world. If proper facilities were given, the volume of export trade from Yugoslavia could be increased indefinitely.

Two countries, England and France, which could be excellent customers, get, as M. Polyzoides himself points out, only 1.38 and 3.8 per cent. of the total trade of Yugoslavia. This trade, however, can never be developed as long as conditions in Saloniki remain as they are. The same holds good of the potential trade with the United States, which is at present negligible.

The broad and brutal fact remains that Saloniki is the natural port of its hinterland, which is Yugoslavia, a country of over 100,000 square miles with a population of nearly 13,000,000 souls. Does M. Polyzoides pretend that Saloniki could live from the forty-eight miles of sparsely populated, malaria-infested territory lying between it and the Serbian frontier? Without the trade of the Yugoslav hinterland Saloniki must perish.

M. Polyzoides further declares that Yugoslavia desires to create "a repetition of the famous, or rather infamous, Polish corridor to Dantzic, with Eastern Macedonia and Western Thrace reduced to the status of isolation of East Prussia." Such a description of the desires of Yugoslavia is completely erroneous. All that the Belgrade Government demands is that the scandalous maladministration of the section of Belgrade-Saloniki trunk line, the forty-eight miles lying between Ghevgeli and Saloniki, shall cease. With that object in view it proposed to extend the administration from Belgrade over the Ghevgeli-Saloniki line, as that section carries practically nothing but merchandise en route from or to Yugoslavia.

This proposal was rejected by the Athens Government as being incompatible with Greek sovereignty. The Belgrade Government then proposed that an international consortium should be created, 40 per cent. Greek, 40 per cent. Yugoslav and 20 per cent. French, the President and the chief administrators being French and the personnel being half Greek and half on the Adriatic, one at Sebenik and the other at Cattaro. The Belgrade Government would certainly never dream of establishing a naval base in Saloniki, a port separated from its frontiers by forty-eight miles of foreign territory. • • •

STRENGTH OF STEEL BUILDINGS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

J. Yearwood, in a letter to The Times discussing my letter, suggests the inspection of tall buildings after twenty-five years' service, states that my defense of steel frameworks is based solely on surface indications of rust, which, so far as the published letter is concerned, is substantially true, and goes on to enumerate various other forms of deterioration which are popularly but, so far as high-class skyscrapers are concerned, erroneously supposed to impair the strength of steel structures.

Steel frameworks are designed and proportioned accurately for the required loads and service. The steel and its treatment correspond not only to the amount of possible stress but to its quality. The structural steel is the strongest, most perfect, uniform and durable of all major building materials; it cannot be burned and cannot snap off and break like stone and timber, but yields very slowly by bending or stretching. A bar under a heavy pull will elongate a quarter of its length or more before breaking.

Steel of a definite strength, toughness and ductility, with exact chemical constituents and of uniform quality, is a standard commercial product and is rigidly tested both by the manufacturer and by the engineer or architect to verify its strength, which according to its required service is always specified to be from three to six times as great as the greatest strain it is permitted to receive.

The processes of manufacture and fabrication are so thoroughly perfected and standardized that it is almost impossible for the finished beams, columns and trusses to have any serious defects of material or workmanship, and the individual pieces are far more reliable and perfect than any similar ones of wood, concrete, stone or cast iron.

Structural steel can only be injured by overloading, by mechanical treatment or by heat or chemical action. Overloading is practically impossible except by major accident or gross incompetence. Mechanical injury must be deliberate. Chemical action is either rust or electrolysis, both of which can be entirely prevented by painting and by other measures. Injury by heat may be prevented by adequate fireproofing, some forms of which also afford excellent protection thermal or stress conditions that cannot obtain in a building in service.

Moisture cannot take place in their metal skeletons. It can only affect steelwork when reasonable provisions against it are not provided or maintained. Often it is due to cavities or porosity of the masonry that are unnecessary. Adequate painting is sufficient protection against it.

After all, rust is the most universal and serious threat to structural steel, but, fortunately, it is and can be only superficial and can always be detected and prevented by the simplest superficial methods.

Bridges and buildings are by no means comparable; bridges are constantly exposed to great changes of atmosphere, temperature, moisture and loading and to destructive reversed stresses and impact, vibration, corrosive gases, &c., that buildings almost or entirely escape. Buildings are practically free from live loads, which are the most severe loads for bridges. Buildings can well be and generally are thoroughly fireproofed, which is impossible and not attempted for bridges. Bridges are constantly wholly exposed and invite as much as they need thorough periodical inspections, which are easily made.

Engineers should and can and do build steel frameworks of buildings that under reasonable given conditions will be safe and unimpaired for many years.

ALLIED AID TO ITALY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to a letter written by a Chester H. Aldrich and published in The New York Times of today on "Foreign Troops in Italy," permit me to quote some official figures referring to the Italian losses.

Better to appreciate the importance of Italy's losses, compared with those of the other countries, it must also be remembered that Italy entered the war in May, 1915, that is, ten months after the conflagration had started.

The number of Italian soldiers who died on the field, on all fronts, was 642,788, thus distributed:

In Italy	636,000
In France	4,375
In Macedonia	750
In Albania	1,663

On the other hand, only 1,541 soldiers of different other nationalities died on the Italian front; that is:

WASHINGTON ADVISED ARMY ON USING RUM

His Order Telling Men How to Conserve Their Liquor Ration Is in Congress Library

By STEPHEN BONSAL.

WHAT George Washington said, ordered or did in relation to the use or manufacture of alcohol has not been fully revealed or exploited. Some of his letters, certain of his military orders, parts of his diary have been republished by opponents or proponents of prohibition. But, so far as I know, an order of the day, issued in 1782, in which the Father of our Country delivered his considered judgment and command on the present engrossing topic of liquor drinking, never—till now—has been printed.

Washington's dictum and earnest advice on the subject are not to be found in the volumes compiled by Sparks or by Ford or by any other of the editors of his writings. To explain this apparent negligence on the part of those distinguished scholars, it should be said that they compiled in statelier days when the liquor question had not become a national obsession.

The order mentioned above reposes in the manuscript division of the Library of Congress, next door to the Capitol, and again and again it was reproduced in the orderly books of the regiments. Many of these orderly books are still to be seen in the old records office of the War Department. Any one properly accredited can see these records, can turn from the contentious present to a verity of the past.

General Washington's Order No. 145.

Here is what General Washington had to say when he spoke to the men upon whose constant sturdy bravery the winning of the liberties we now enjoy depended:

"145

"Head Quarters, Newburg,
"16th May, 1782.

"The General is extremely concerned to learn that an Article so salutary as that of distilled liquors was expected to be when properly used, and which was designed for the refreshment and comfort of the Troops, has been in many instances productive of very ill consequences.

"He calls the attention of Officers of every grade to remedy these abuses and to watch over the health of their men, for which purpose he Suggests the expedient of keeping liquor rolls in every Corps, from which the name of every Soldier shall be struck off who addicts himself to drunkenness or injures his Constitution by intemperance.

"Such soldiers as are struck off are not to draw liquor on any occasion but are to receive other articles in lieu thereof. The evil practice of swallowing the whole ration of liquor at a single draught is also to be prevented by causing the Sergeants to see it duly distributed daily and mixed with water at stated times; in which Case instead of being pernicious it will become very refreshing and Salutary.

The Quantity to Be Drawn.

"An object so essential to the health of the men ought not only to be Super-intended by the officer of Police, as it is worthy to attract the attention of every officer who is anxious for the reputation of the Corps to which he belongs, the welfare of individuals and the good of the Service. But it rests principally with the Commandants of Corps to have so useful a regulation carried effectually into execution, as well as to preserve cleanliness, economy and good order within the Spheres of their respective Commands.

"Major General Heath will be pleased to settle with the Brigadiers and Commanding officers of Brigades the quantity of liquor proper to be drawn in kind by the troops. After which he is authorized to commute by agreement with the Contractors the rations of Whiskey, or such proportions of them as may be judged necessary for vegetables or other articles agreeably to the prices fixed in the contracts to the component parts of rations."

How the Transcript Was Made.

While many of the order books of the Revolutionary Army have disappeared and many pages of those preserved are almost, if not quite, illegible, a complete transcript of Washington's orders—this one among them—still survives. The transcript was made as a consequence of his sense of justice toward a much injured individual.

Richard Varick had the misfortune to be aide-de-camp to Benedict Arnold at the time of the latter's treason. He asked that the findings of the court-martial by which he was tried for complicity be published so that the slanderers by whose utterances he had suffered would be silenced. Washington did not have the necessary funds or the authority to do this, but he thought out a way in which the ends of justice could be served and the archives of the Revolution preserved.

Numerous official papers were accumulating at headquarters and others had been collected here and there in barns and storehouses. Washington pointed out to Congress the danger of this disorder. Congress authorized him to employ a recording secretary. He appointed the maligned Richard Varick to this position.

So it happens that while the orderly books are scattered and many of them are doubtless lost, the forty-four folio volumes of the Varick transcript remain in a clear penmanship that cannot be equaled in this day of typing. Varick and his clerks labored with such industry that before the surrender at Yorktown they had caught up with the headquarters business. Thus it may be said that for the later years the transcript is contemporaneous with the orderly books and the occurrences they chronicle.

Is the Heat-Leaking House* going out of date?

THE BUILDING AUTHORITIES SAY, "YES, LOOK AHEAD!"

IT is a great mistake, say the authorities in the building field, to build heat-leaking houses today.

"Look ahead," they say; five years from now, or even sooner, such houses will be shunned—hard to sell, rent or mortgage.

For these houses have cold rooms, draughty hallways, chilly floors, in winter. In summer the sun beats right through them. You can remember stifling days, sleepless nights, oven-like rooms.

Walls may seem solid, yet leak heat

Ordinary building materials alone* (wood, brick, plaster, concrete, etc.) offer but slight resistance to the passage of heat. No matter how your house is built, heat will leak through solid walls and roof, unless you use a special heat-stopping material.

Celotex Insulating Lumber is such a material. It practically stops heat (see the chart). It shuts out wind and moisture. It deadens sound. It is manufactured from tough cane fibre. It is 4′ wide, 8′ to 12′ long, 7/16″ thick, and weighs about 60 pounds per 100 square feet.

Vital home protection

Your first year in a house built with Celotex will be a revelation in home comfort and economy.

Every room snug and warm all winter long. Better shelter—better health! And year after year Celotex will save about one-third your fuel bill.

On sweltering summer days and nights, you will enjoy the refreshing difference it makes in house temperature.

Celotex also makes a stronger, more durable house—because it is much stronger than wood in wall sections. It is the only effective insulating material which provides this greater strength in the house walls and the only insulation that is not an extra item in the building.

Little or no extra building cost

Unlike ordinary insulation, Celotex replaces other materials. As sheathing, it adds nothing to the cost of a house. Under plaster it costs a trifle more—but consider the advantages it gives:

(1) As sheathing, Celotex supplies the insulation needed back of stucco, brick or wood exteriors. Here it replaces the rough boards formerly used, giving greater strength to the house walls and makes the use of building paper unnecessary.

(2) On inside walls and ceilings plaster is applied directly to the surface of Celotex. This eliminates the use of lath, and forms stronger insulated walls, free from lath marks.

(3) Celotex is used for interior and exterior finish. It may be left in its attractive natural tan color, stained, stenciled or painted in any way.

(4) Celotex eliminates the necessity for deadening felt. Sound does not pass through it readily.

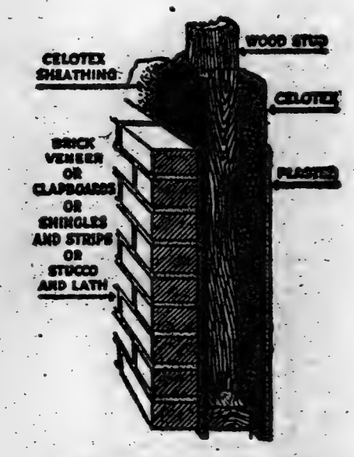
(5) Celotex does away with any extra insulation. It gives heat-stopping value, equal to the best.

New comforts in old houses, too

You can enjoy a big measure of Celotex comfort in the house you now live in. Simply line your attic and basement with Celotex. That helps, and costs but little.

Ask your architect, contractor or lumber dealer to tell you more about Celotex. All lumber dealers can supply it. Leaders in these lines advise its use.

Meanwhile, send for the free Celotex Building Book. It explains fully this great improvement in building. Mail the coupon below.



HOW CELOTEX IS USED

On outside walls, as sheathing, it affords insulation and adds many times the structural strength of wood. On inside walls and ceilings, under plaster, it gives a stronger insulated wall with a better bond between Celotex and plaster than the key between wood lath and plaster. It eliminates lath marks.

JINGOES BLAMED FOR TYROL CLASH

Towns of Territory Now Governed by Italy Are Found to Be Peaceful—German and Fascist Extremists Seen as Trouble-Makers

By W. STEPHEN BUSH.

BOLZANO, Italy.

THE traveler passing through Southern Germany on his way to the Southern Tyrol, now under Italian sovereignty, hears tales of outrage and violence. Notably in the stately beer palaces of Munich, where the indigenous Bavarian stein, known technically as the "mass krug," is drained by day and by night, indignant voices are heard protesting against the "oppression of our Tyrolean brothers."

As the traveler moves on through the western remains of Austria, the lament over the perishing Tyroleans is found increasing in volume. Naturally, as the train leaves the last Austrian station, Gries, and rolls on slowly toward the Brenner, set in a majesty of eternal snows, one is prepared for striking evidences of Italian tyranny and despotism.

Examination of passports outside of Germany is largely a matter of form in these days, but not at the new gate into Italy. The Italian inspector is satisfied with one brief glance at the American or British passport, but devotes a lot of attention to passports issued by the Austrian or German Governments.

Having entered the Southern Tyrol, one is surprised not only at the complete change in the names of the railroad stations, but also at the display of armed forces at every stop. Large groups of carabinieri and blackshirts march up and down. They are members of several cordons stationed in the new territory between the Brenner and the old custom house at Ala to control foot passengers and motor cars or other vehicles that travel about in that section.

A German or Austrian trader, or indeed any citizen of either nationality who wants to get about in this district, has to show his passport quite a number of times and gets lots of opportunities to explain his reasons for wanting to travel in the "Alto Adige," as the Southern Tyrol is now officially called by the Italian Government. Citizens of other nations have to show their passports, too, but the inspector seldom takes a second look and never asks a second question.

Normalcy the Rule.

The train stops at Bolzano. No longer does the conductor call out the name in the two languages as of old under the Austrian régime, though the German name Bozen is painted alongside Bolzano on the station. Bolzano is a city of some size, the largest town in the Southern Tyrol. Before the war its population was almost entirely German, though all its political affiliations were with Vienna and not with Berlin.

In Munich Bolzano had been described as a bleeding city, where conditions resembled the horrors preceding the Sicilian Vespers. As a matter of fact, I found Bolzano a textbook illustration of the dull routine of normalcy. The charming old town looked exactly the same as it did in 1913; the same life in the streets, the same life in the hotels, much the same busy throng in the main public square where the monument of Walther von der Vogelweide, the German troubadour or minnesinger, still stands as of old, despite rumors in Innsbruck and Munich that the sacred statue had been seized by the Fascisti and impounded in a museum. On the surface of things there was little change visible to the casual passer-by.

The observer must stay in the city for at least a day or two to find the changes that have actually taken place. The most obvious of these is the presence of the Italian language as an invariable concomitant of any public lettering in German. Not only the Government buildings, but also every store, every restaurant, every sign post, every school, every cemetery must be bi-lingual. The gay old gasthaus out in the suburbs, where scarcely a word of Italian is spoken all the year around, must be advertised as a "trattoria" before it is allowed to do business.

In the hotels no bill is handed to the guests which is not printed either wholly in Italian or in the two languages. The names of the streets are almost all Italian. This is a change that occurred only recently. It has, of course, given rise to some discontent; but the annoyance occasioned for the German-speaking rural population within the zone of Bolzano is felt more keenly than any injury to national pride. The old Walther Platz is now the Piazza Vittorio Emanuele.

Other Language Problems.

The Italian Government has ordered all elementary education to be imparted in the Italian language. On the other hand, the schools of the higher grades are still taught in German. So far restrictions covering the use of German in private schools are not severe. It is insisted, however, that in every private school some branch of knowledge must be taught in Italian exclusively.

The Department of Education at Rome openly aims at the eventual elimination of German from all of the schools supported wholly or in part by public moneys, but it is disposed to be tolerant and will not hurry the proposed changes unduly. Lectures are being arranged all through the German portion of the Alto Adige. The appeal to the younger generation is well conceived and systematically carried out.

No attempt is made to interfere with the use of the German language in churches where most of the worshippers are German. All kinds of religious services may be held in German where the parishioners have always been used to that language. Nor, so far as I have been able to observe, does any one interfere with the use of the German language in the streets or the railways or other public places.

More Italian is now spoken in Bolzano than was spoken before the war. There are soldiers from the Southern provinces of Italy and there is a considerable army of officials from the West and South of the Kingdom. All these men talk nothing but Italian. Until recently the bilingual system prevailed in official notices and proclamations and was tolerated even in the courts. This procedure has been altered.

The German-speaking Tyrolean enjoys the same rights in the courts as do his Italian-speaking fellow-citizens; but if he knows only German he must bring along an interpreter or be satisfied with the one provided by the Court. No person can qualify for jury service unless he speaks Italian fairly well. In civil suits preference is given to jurors who know both languages.

Seeking Discontent in Vain.

I have visited restaurants where nothing is heard but German, for I was told that in such places could be heard most plainly the murmur of discontent. Though I listened often and attentively I could hear no such murmur. Perhaps my foreign aspect caused people to be somewhat diffident, but I always made it plain that I was not an Italian. I invited confidences and, to get the conversation going, spoke of Wilson and his Fourteen Points. But the restaurant guests never abandoned their neutrality.

I thought at first that this might be due to fear; now I believe it is due to indifference. After a stay of two weeks in Bolzano, Merano and Trenton, I am convinced that the Tyroleans do not aspire to martyrdom and deliberately keep off the pedestal of heroic patriotism which Berlin, Munich and Vienna have erected for their convenience.

Perhaps it is a case of the fleshpots. There is no denying the prosperity of the Southern Tyrol, which contrasts strongly with the wretched conditions in the Austrian Tyrol. Innsbruck, for example, despite its large English-speaking colony in Winter, looks lean indeed compared with the sleek appearance of Bolzano or Merano or Trento or Bressanone.

There is a group of malcontents, mostly men who were prominent under the ancient régime. There is a section, too, of older people who look upon loyalty to the memory of the Hapsburgs as a religious rather than a political duty; who live in the past and talk of Andreas Hofer, hoping that another liberator will soon appear to free them from the Italians, as Hofer freed them from the French and the Bavarians. These men and women are believed to be in the minority.

Tension Caused by Extremists.

Their best allies are Fascist extremists, of whom there are many in the Southern Tyrol. They have done more than have any genuine Tyroleans to keep alive misunderstandings apt to arise between two races. Such differences are accentuated when one of these races claims to be the victor over the other.

Fascisti have broken up peaceful and harmless parades of Tyrolean sharpshooting societies. Fascisti have gone into peaceful German-speaking villages, frightening the women and children with their shouts of "Ciala!" and "Eja, eja, eja!" Fascisti have daubed big streaks of red, white and green, the Italian national colors, on the monument of Walther in Bolzano, and have treated tourists from Germany with needless severity—though it must be added that the German tourists often seem to welcome a fight with beetle-browed blackshirts.

No one who has been in Italy for any length of time will doubt that there is much sincerity in the Fascist ranks and that many Fascists are able and energetic men. Unfortunately the Tyroleans find this hard to believe, since so many of the Fascists they have seen are offensive.

There are German-speaking Tyroleans who, though proud of the traditions of their country, feel that they cannot hold out against the new order of things. These are especially numerous among the burghers and peasants—the backbone of the old Tyrol. The Italian Government realizes that these men would make highly desirable citizens if they could be won over to the new dispensation.

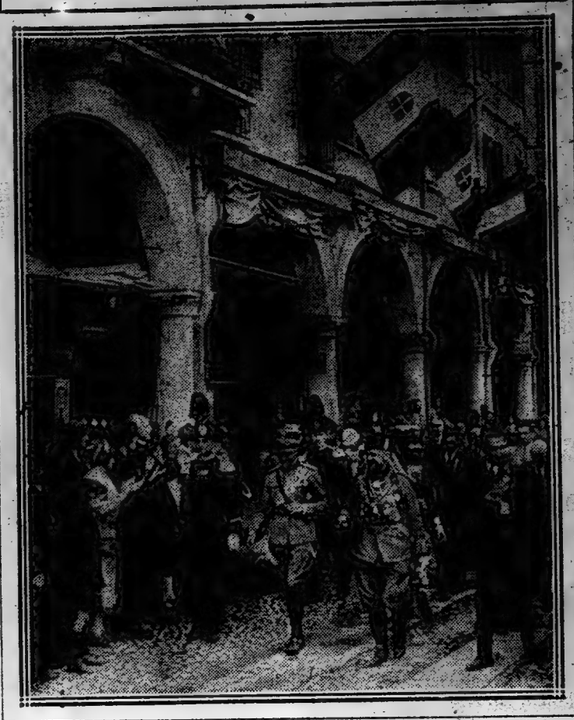
Several Italian writers of note have written flatteringly of the Tyroleans now under Italian domination. They have called attention to their cleanly habits, to their thrift and industry, to their sturdy character, their loyal instincts and reliability. Some have even ventured to propose them as models to their countrymen in other sections of the Kingdom, to the disgust of extreme Fascist journals.

The great mass of the German Tyrolean is disposed to be quiet and resigned, willing to make the best of the present situation. On the other hand, the average Italian is disposed to be tolerant. Whatever smoldering fires of discontent there may be should die away, unless agitators on both sides are permitted to feed the flames and eventually to cause a serious conflagration.

The plain people in the Southern Tyrol will be glad to be left alone; to be allowed to regulate their lives in their own fashion and according to their needs. The German minorities in cities like Trent are not disturbed in the least, and would be the first to resent any agitation on their behalf. It begins to look as if the German majorities in Bolzano and Merano will eventually have to take the offensive against the ill-advised campaign carried on in their favor outside.

If in addition to this leaders of the Fascisti will recall their fanatics and cause to be moderated the savage tone and brutal caricatures of the Fascist press, the whole question will take care of itself and need never be brought before the League of Nations. The German talk of boycotting Italian goods and of staying out of Italy is as ill-advised as is the abuse printed in extreme Fascist newspapers.

A DEMONSTRATION IN BOLZANO



INCREASE IN PARIS TAXI RATES LEAVES THEM LESS THAN OURS

PARIS taxicab drivers, who saved the city from the Germans by transporting an army with rare expedition, and who can squeeze more trunks into the space beside their seats than the chauffeurs of any other capital, now enjoy an increase in rates and, consequently, in tips.

The action of the Municipal Council in granting a 25 per cent. rise in the day charges and a 100 per cent. advance in the tariff between 11 P. M. and 6:30 A. M. has brought forth many protests. There have even been vague suggestions of a boycott, but they are scarcely taken seriously.

One of the chief objections to the new regulations is that the double rate becomes effective at an hour when many of the restaurants are still filled and the daily rhythm of the city's life" is in full swing. Some critics insist that the pre-war system of making the night rate effective at midnight should have been adopted.

Taxicabs in Paris play a part in the city's transportation more important in some respects than do those of New York. For the subways stop at about 1 A. M. and the buses are so crowded after the theatres that one must often wait long for a ride. For him who pays in dollars, however, the taxi rates, even on the new schedule, are considerably lower than those of New York.

KENTUCKY SEEKS TO SAVE FALLS

Led by Governor, Determined Opposition Has Developed to Hydroelectric Dam in Cumberland River

By VANCE PRATHER,
Kentucky State Park Commissioner.
FRANKFORT, KY.

PRESERVATION of Cumberland Falls, Kentucky's finest single scenic asset, is the objective of a nation-wide drive, now at its height, with the Governor of the State, William Jason Fields, and the Kentucky State Park Commission leading the way. Shall it be a recreational playground and a State or national game preserve, or shall it be dried up and its waters diverted and converted into electrical power for commercial profit?

These questions, asked by friends of the "falls," must be decided within the next sixty days, for the Federal Power Commission at Washington has before it the application of a hydroelectric corporation that seeks to dam the Cumberland River, just above and just below the falls, and in such manner as to destroy forever its usefulness as a public playground.

Cumberland Falls, 80 feet high and 125 feet wide, is the largest waterfall of the Appalachian Range—nearly half as high as Niagara. It is the largest waterfall between the Appalachians and the Rockies, and is known as the "Niagara of the Middle West, Kentucky's Niagara."

Against its destruction the National Park Service, the National Conference on State Parks, the Regional Conference on State Parks (Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, West Virginia and Illinois) the National Audubon Society, Izaak Walton League of America, Wild Flower Preservation Society of America, General Federation of Women's Clubs, National League for Women Voters, Automobile Clubs, Chambers of Commerce and similar civic organizations are protesting.

Cumberland Falls forms part of the Cumberland River, dividing Whitley and McCreary counties, is twenty miles from the Tennessee line and exactly midway between Michigan and Florida. It is 181 miles due south of Cincinnati on the Southern Railway, where passengers leave the train (at Cumberland Falls station, or Parker Lake, Ky.) and proceed thence thirteen miles over a smooth clay road from the railroad to the river. Burnside lies north of the falls on the river, where it meets the South Fork.

As the crow flies the distance from Burnside to the falls is approximately fourteen miles, but as the river meanders it is some forty-five miles if followed by small boat or canoe. It is a winding, alluringly picturesque stream, choked with narrowed banks and cliffs and dotted with boulders weighing many hundreds of tons. The Old Hunters' Trail passed within thirteen miles of the Falls.

The Region of the Falls.

The meandering Cumberland River, which rises in the mountains near Harlan, descends between steep forested, picturesque mountains on its way to the Ohio and forms one of the unique scenic spots and one of the finest natural playgrounds to be found in all America. The Cumberland here drops by 12-foot rapids and plunges precipitately over a sheer fall of from 68 to 85 feet, depending on the stage of the river. A great pool, worn by time and the rushing water to a depth of 60 feet, lies below. The river then runs on for miles through a narrow, walled-in gorge, often almost blocked by the giant boulders, 40 or more feet in height. These boulders, that once were overhanging ledges, jarred from their mooring places by time and the elements, have been worn round and smooth. Rainbows hover over the falls at all hours of the day and at night the moonbow stands out sharply in the pool.

The region about the falls is almost primeval. Great clusters of pink and white mountain laurel brush the cheeks of saunterers along the cliff-side pathways, with mountain azalea, wild cucumber, redbud and dogwood greeting one at a sudden turn. Holly, magnolia and huckleberry block one's footsteps. The pawpaw, persimmon, walnut, beech, oak, sycamore, elm, sassafras, wild grape and the most verdant willow to be found in all mid-western America grow luxuriantly.

It is a wonderfully beautiful site for a State reservation, State park or game preserve or even a national park area. No spot is more accessible to tourists from other States. Two railroads are near by and a third is to be an early reality. The Lookout Mountain Highway, to be completed at the end of 1926, will be a straight-line motoring outlet from the Great Lakes to the Gulf.

Flora of North and South.

Botanically, the Cumberland Falls region has flora of both the North and the South. Rhododendron trees a foot thick are found in its fastnesses. Rare moccasin flowers, the wild pea-vine, so useful in deer feeding, and other specimens thrive here. Geologically, the Cumberland region is of the early Pottsville age—conglomerate sandstone and shale. Some minerals are found.

Historically, the Cumberland region is a laboratory for the study of early American folklore and primitive mountain life. Cabins lie far apart, up roadless ravines; squatter rights prevail. Within these primitive cabins one still may find spinning wheels and handlooms. Schools run from "crops to Christmas," at Seed Tick and Indian, nine miles apart. Doctors are twenty-five miles away. A family resident at the falls for some twenty years has been the one point of contact with the civilization of the "furriners." Yet these blue-eyed people of the mountains are straight descendants of the English pioneers!

This Cumberland Falls tract first was recorded in grants from the Governor of Virginia. Earlier history gives unusually vivid Indian legends and records. The Battle of Shiloh (two miles away) was fought in defense of the "place of worship"—doubtless Cumberland Falls. Little Eagle, nearby, was guarded day and night. Preceding the Indians are traces of a still older civilization, or semi-civilization, for the Aztecs, who once sought the conquest of North America, were turned back at Lexington, Ky., and their "retreat" was by way of Cumberland Falls and Chattanooga to Mexico. And preceding the Aztecs were the mysterious half-mythical "Moon-Faced People," who lived and buried by a rule of seven. Skeletons and chests found nearby have gone to the museum of Harvard University.

Eligible as Game Preserve.

Preservation of Cumberland Falls is imperative for a State park or State or national game preserve for the future. Wild turkey, pheasant, partridge, gray fox, opossum, raccoon and groundhog, still are to be found there. Deer and bear, even buffalo (as proved by late finds of the University of Kentucky) formerly were plentiful and may be introduced, through a co-operative arrangement with the Interior Department and the National Park Service.

Black bass, both large-mouth and small-mouth, perch, jack salmon, trout and the channel, yellow and mud-cat, are found in the stream above the falls and in the pool below. State restocking of these streams and pools, by the Kentucky Game and Fish Commission, would give quick returns and provide a haven for the sportsman.

For seventy-five years Cumberland Falls has been visited by people who love the wild beauties of nature. For several years past, even with limited hotel and camping accommodations and with meagre transportation facilities, an average of nine hundred visitors have come yearly from every direction. These "Old Repeaters" now urge the preservation of this playground for themselves and for the countless thousands who will come with the building of additional transportation facilities.

But Three Rivers Untouched.

Kentucky has 12,000 miles of streams, the greatest mileage of any State in the American Union. It did have eight major rivers. Hydroelectric projects have, however, left the State just three rivers, the Nolin, the Rockcastle and the Cumberland. Governor Fields tells the power promoters he welcomes the development of Kentucky's resources; that Kentucky does not resist legitimate power development; but that the damming of the Cumberland at the falls for hydroelectric development "must not go through."

Governor Fields goes even further than that. At the Regional Conference on State Parks, at Cliffy Falls State Park, near Madison, Ind., last October, he said:

"Parks are not matters of local interest in this day of motor travel and finished highway, but rather are the property of the nation. I take the stand on this proposal that as long as I am Governor of Kentucky and a citizen of the State I shall oppose all efforts to develop any location so adapted by nature as a scenic spot for the recreation of human beings. It is therefore my purpose in appearing before the Regional Conference on State Parks, in the national movement for the establishment of State parks, to ask your cooperation in the endeavor to prevent the Federal Power Commission from granting a permit for the hydroelectric development of Cumberland Falls."

EARLY AMERICAN SILVER

ARTISTIC silver work was wrought in America long before the Declaration of Independence, and some dextrous examples of the skill of early silver designers are still extant. Daniel Henchman advertised in the Boston Evening Post in 1773 that "He makes with his owne hands all kinds of large and small plate work, in the genteelest taste and newest fashion, and of the purest silver." Jacobus Van der Spiegel and Garrett Onclebagh were both experts at handling silver in New York. There exists a chalice, presented to the First Reformed Dutch Church of Kingston, N. Y., devised by Jacob Boelen in 1683.

Castles—
Real and Beautiful

GERMANY is a castle country. Scarcely a mountain but has its towering castles, magnificent palaces and crumbling ruins. History has been made in some and all are famous in song, legend and story.

Throughout the Rhineland, the Black Forest, Bavaria, the Harz, Saxonia and Thuringia these castles abound. To omit Germany from your European trip would be to neglect the most colorful, interesting and enjoyable sightseeing area on the Continent.

Rates ($800 & up) include return any time this year.

LAND CRUISES

Scenery by day—nights at noted hotels

Cruise-routes include California, National Parks, Alaska, Canadian Rockies, etc., exploring Indian pueblos, stone forests, gold countries, cowboy lands . . . places of traditional greatness and places of intense interest heretofore almost inaccessible to the average traveler. Rates include many automobile trips and nights spent "ashore".

First cruise sails June 1. Rates from New York $335 & up.

ROUND SOUTH AMERICA

INCREASE IN SCOUT CAMPSITES FOSTERS OUTDOOR INTERESTS

Tracts Well Equipped for Merit Badge Work, Sports and Winter Outings

CAMP sites belonging to Boy Scout councils are multiplying fast. In 556 council camps and 1,216 troop camps more than 250,000 weeks of attendance were recorded last Summer. Nearly 200 councils already own their camp properties, which are well equipped with substantial buildings, waterfront safety devices and other apparatus required by the camp standards of the Scout organization. Not only quiet and safe location, water supply and healthful surroundings are considered in the selection of property, but also possibilities for tree nurseries, forest plantings, nature dens, nature trails, herb and Indian gardens, museums and zoos. Thirty councils in twenty different States acquired camp sites last year. Many councils have had the foresight to purchase or acquire through lease, with option to buy, choice sites which are ever increasing in value because of the greater demand by American families for Summer homes and country places.

Interest in Winter camping has had a definite bearing on a more permanent type of building for camps. And in addition to the main structures there are on many sites cabins, tents, shacks and tepees erected by the Scouts themselves. Several councils own two properties, one near by for short-term camps and overnight hikes, the other, further away from the city, for Summer camp. Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Rome, Detroit, Flint, Washington, Seattle and Portland each own two camp properties so located. Public service of all kinds is a typical feature of the well-organized Scout camp life. This service includes fire fighting, trail building, wild-life conservation, tree planting, development of natural beauty spots, as well as service at county fairs, as guides, messengers, first-aiders and demonstrators of scoutcraft. Swimming, life-saving practice and boating, dramatics and pageants and handicraft of various kinds add color to the days at camp. There must be plenty of elbow room for merit badge work; for contests in outdoor activities, such as archery, cooking, signaling and fire building, and for making the nature dens, spacious zoos and out-of-doors museums.

Go-and-Vote Campaign.

The Boy Scouts of Portland, Ore., are expressing their patriotism by urging every citizen to go to the polls and vote. They are not working in behalf of the election of any one candidate or the carrying of any issue. Their effort is non-political, to increase the total number of votes cast by urging every qualified person to register. A neat handbill has been distributed to every house bearing the following inscription: "If you have not registered, will you please do so? The books are open at Room 241 in the Court House from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M. until April 30, 1926. This flower will call at your home in about two weeks. If you will register between now and then, it will assist the troop toward winning an interstate contest."

***

Donate Trees for Camp.

Fruit trees of many kinds will play an important part in the plans for making the Panhandle (Texas) Scouts camp site the most beautiful spot in Palo Duro Canyon.

The trees, the gift of a nursery, will include such varieties as cherries, plums, pears and apples. Berry plants and grape vines will be included.

The camp site was presented to the Scouts by Dr. and Mrs. Phebe K. [illegible]

***

Help Aged Negro.

Mark Cane, an aged ex-slave, living in Spokane, Wash., is going to enjoy a seed garden about his little home. When time for Spring planting comes, scout patrols from Troop 24 hiked to the old man's place and, as their good turn for the day, put the garden in order for the season.

***

Memorial House Opened.

A beautiful new clubhouse in San Antonio, Texas, is the possession of the Scouts of Alamo Area Council. The house was recently dedicated as the Joske Memorial Clubhouse for Boy Scouts. It is the gift to the Council of the late Alexander Joske. When completed and furnished it will have cost approximately $100,000.

***

Hear Radio in Cave.

Through their own experiment in Marvel Cave, Ozark, Mo., a troop of Scouts reccently convinced themselves of the ability of radio waves to travel in all directions. In a large auditorium in the cave, on a level 200 feet below the entrance, they placed a radio receiving set. With the set at a six-foot aerial, a program of music from a Cincinnati station was heard. The music was so clear that it could be heard at the mouth of the cave.

***

To Reforest Mountain.

Out in the Rockies, Scouts are planning to reforest a mountain area recently burned by forest fire. As soon as the cold weather is definitely over, troops of Boulder, Col., will go to beautiful Flagstaff Mountain and plant tree seeds over the entire section ravaged by flames. The work will be supervised by Forest Service experts.

Remember two things in choosing a player-piano. (1) Ease of action: The Standard is admittedly the easiest pumping player action on the market. You can play for hours without getting tired. (2) The piano itself: Will it stand the hard usage to which a player-piano is subjected? A mediocre piano simply will not stand the strain—won't last. And that's poor economy.

The famous Hardman durability is built into the Standard piano. There's a rich, mellow tone which endures—never grows "tinny." It will give you years of supreme satisfaction.

PHILADELPHIA.

PENNSYLVANIA is in the throes of a three-cornered Senatorial fight that has needlessly split one of the most powerful political organizations in this country; brought the prohibition issue to the forefront after years of pussyfooting; forced Secretary Mellon to assume political leadership and may cause President Coolidge his first real loss of prestige since the eventful evening when he was sworn into the Presidency in that lamp-lighted farm house in Vermont. The most surprising phase of this unprecedented contest is that it involves the possibility of having this rock-ribbed Republican State represented in the United States Senate by a Democrat for the first time in more than half a century.

If Don Cameron, Matthew Stanley Quay and Boies Penrose could gaze upon the smashed parts of the powerful machine they built with such painstaking care it would be enough to make them tear their shrouds in hopeless rage. When the elder Cameron passed from this troubled world he was succeeded by Quay, and when Quay died Penrose took the throttle of the machine. When Penrose died he left no successor. The man who is to fill his shoes has yet to prove himself.

The lack of a competent political boss brought about the present state of affairs with Senator George Wharton Pepper, Governor Gifford Pinchot and Representative William S. Vare, each insisting that if he is not sent to the Senate it will mean the pulling down of the pillars that hold up the temple of Republicanism in the Keystone State of the Union.

Three Leading Political Actors.

In order to understand the situation it is necessary to know something about the personality and history of the three actors in the drama. George Wharton Pepper personifies in the highest degree the respectability of Philadelphia. He stands well at the bar, is an accomplished orator and, under normal conditions, would be the natural and logical successor to himself. But three unnatural factors—Pinchot, Vare and the liquor issue—have intervened to threaten his return to the Senate. Yet when Governor Sproul appointed Mr. Pepper to fill the unexpired term of the late Boies Penrose he was looked upon as the ideal Senator who would win distinction at Washington and continue in the office indefinitely.

His difficulty is the lack of any organized following. One of his sponsors for the appointment to the Senatorship was General Atterbury, now President of the Pennsylvania Railroad. It is not unreasonable to suppose that the officers of that corporation will gladly give Mr. Pepper all of the help in their power, but it is doubtful if they have the ability to swing the votes of their employes. Railroad men are notoriously hard to control, and they will be especially so in this contest.

Senator Pepper has unquestionably made a good impression in Washington, but for some reason or other he has not caught the imagination of the party workers. This may be partly due to a lawyer-like tendency to split hairs. He is a friend of President Coolidge and is counted among his supporters, and yet he opposed the World Court for a long while after Mr. Coolidge had declared for it. He has been and still is for the Volstead act.

George Wharton Pepper looks like a Senator, acts like a Senator, and reflects credit upon Pennsylvania. He is well versed in international and every other kind of law and, to Pennsylvania's way of thinking, is sound on the tariff. But during the time he has been in the Senate he has not been able to build up any kind of a Pepper machine, and this in spite of the fact that he is attentive to the needs of his constituents and will go to any lengths to oblige the voters of the State. This will not seem so strange when we consider that Quay and Penrose required a lifetime in building up their organizations. Pepper, suddenly catapulted into a seat in the Senate, could hardly be expected to create a machine of his own in a few years.

Still Called Carpet-Bagger.

We come to one of the chief causes of Mr. Pepper's troubles when we turn to Gifford Pinchot, Governor of Pennsylvania. Mr. Pinchot owes his present position to good luck rather than good management. He is still looked upon by many Pennsylvanians as a carpet-bagger. It is true that he owns an estate in Pike County, but he only occupied it at intervals until he began to have political aspirations in this part of the country. Boies Penrose, who had a great aversion to Pinchot, always referred to him contemptuously as "that tree doctor."

When Pinchot ran for Senator against Penrose he was defeated, but after the death of Penrose and when he aspired to the Governorship he had the good luck to win the support of Joseph R. Grundy, a manufacturer of Bristol, who takes a great deal of interest in legislation in Harrisburg and Washington. Mr. Grundy, in one way or another, is looked upon as the representative of the manufacturers of the Keystone State. The organization with which he is affiliated always has its representative at the State Capitol.

Pinchot Wants to Be Senator.

Mr. Grundy had a disagreement with Governor Sproul, and in order to defeat Mr. Alter, Sproul's Attorney General, for the Governorship, he backed Gifford Pinchot, and he did it so effectively that Pinchot was elected. But Governor Pinchot aspires to something higher, and so he resolved to run for the Senate. He has catered to the coal miners and to the Prohibitionists, and he felt that with these two important elements behind him he could make a successful fight against Mr. Pepper. He counts on the labor vote and that of the Young Women's Christian Association. The ministers of the Methodist Conference, after debating whether to be for Pinchot or Pepper, finally left the decision to the individual members on election day.

But Senator Pepper and Governor Pinchot strangely failed to take into consideration one William Scott Vare, better and more popularly known as Bill Vare, Member of Congress from the First Pennsylvania District. Vare is a self-made man. He is one of the three Vare brothers, George, Ed and Bill, who have been powerful factors in the affairs of Philadelphia. They were without early advantages, had virtually no education and raised themselves from nothing to something. George and Ed elected themselves to the State Senate, and after their passing Bill nominated and elected himself to the national House of Representatives. He wanted to be Mayor of Philadelphia, but Penrose always prevented that.

Vare's Simple Arithmetic.

The three brothers made a fortune in street cleaning and in the contracting business. As an orator Bill will not cause the bones of Demosthenes to quiver with jealousy, and if he lives to be a thousand years old he will never look like a Senator. But he is a character, has shown unsuspected ability and as a member of the Senate would furnish unending copy for the Washington correspondents.

Now while Pepper and Pinchot were engaged in hurling verbal bombs at each other Vare was thinking deeply. He noticed particularly that the two P's were struggling to see which one should be the dryest dry candidate. Thereupon he had an inspiration—If dwelling upon the same thought for three months can be called an inspiration—and he announced himself as the only wet candidate for the Senate. His reasoning would have done credit to Aristotle or any of the other Greek philosophers. He said to himself—and a few close friends—"If these two fellows divide the dry vote between them it will leave all of the wet vote to me, and all of the wet vote is sure to be larger than one-half of the dry vote." It was a simple sum in arithmetic and William, otherwise known as Bill, had found the answer.

The candidates go into the primary fight on platforms pledged to the support of President Coolidge and the Republican Party; they agree in their devotion to the protective tariff; they are as one in demanding a reduction in taxes. The real issue, therefore, becomes prohibition and the future of the Volstead act. On this Mr. Vare is sopping wet; Senator Pepper is for upholding the present law and Governor Pinchot is dry as Sahara. But the fairest way of defining their respective stands is to permit them to speak for themselves:

Views of the Three Candidates.

Senator Pepper says:

My concention of my own duty as a United States Senator is to retain the law as it stands.

I am under a constitutional duty imposed upon me in the name of all the people to do all I can to effectuate the prohibitory policy. I am in sympathy with this policy and with Federal and State legislation intended to make it a success.

My idea of what a Federal Executive should do in this direction is best exemplified by President Coolidge.

I stand with him in regard to law enforcement. My idea of what a Federal Judge should do is best illustrated by the enforcement policy and work of Judge Albert W. Johnson of the Middle District of Pennsylvania, whose appointment I had the honor to recommend.

Governor Pinchot says:

My own duty is clear. I shall fight Vare on two main issues. One is to save the State from the gang. On that issue I call upon every man and woman who believes in clean elections, a square deal for street car riders, and upon good citizens generally, to give their vigorous help.

The other is the defense of the dry laws at Washington. I am against weakening these laws. As Senator I will stand for and work for law enforcement in Pennsylvania and outside. If you believe with me on these two issues, this is your fight as much as mine.

For six months Senator Pepper has been an active candidate. For over a year, with Mr. Baker, he has been building up a Pepper organization. Along came Mr. Vare, and like the wolf in the fairy tale, he "huffed and he puffed, and he blew the house down."

Representative Vare says:

Instead of the promised reign of law, prohibition has brought a veritable flood of lawlessness. The moral restraints of life have broken down everywhere. Instead of a happy and contented people we find a people profoundly discontented and justly irritated. This irritation has been increased by a system of offensive espionage. It has become intolerable.

But the greatest harm has come to the boys and girls of this generation, and against this condition I protest with all my strength. What this country needs, in my judgment, is to get away from the evil consequences of a prohibition which in fact does not prohibit, and establish temperance.

I believe that true temperance can be brought about more speedily by so modifying the enforcement laws that they can be readily enforced. A modification which would permit the sale of light wines and beer would, in my opinion, and in the opinion of the best minds that have studied conditions, be the proper step toward re-establishing law and order and getting rid of the evils which have grown up in the train of the Volstead act in its present form.

My candidacy will afford the people of Pennsylvania an opportunity to register their convictions on the subject. They have a right to that opportunity.

Personalities Fly Around.

Personalities are already flying about like champagne corks in pre-prohibition days. Pepper says that Vare stands for "the brewery interests" and that Pinchot represents the "lunatic fringe." Pinchot retorts by saying that both the wets and the drys are "suspicious of Pepper," who is a "wet-dry" and a "dry-wet." Vare, like Brer Rabbit, "he lay low and say nothin'."

It is worth while to record that all of the Senatorial candidates, in filing their petitions with the State Bureau of Elections, handed in many more signatures than is required by law. The Pepper papers had thousands in excess of those necessary; Pinchot's petitions carried over 40,000 names, while those of Vare exceeded the others. Most of these came from the City of Philadelphia, and one of the Vare lieutenants proudly exclaimed: "That's not so bad, but just wait till we get to work on the day of the primaries."

In the bitterness of the Senatorial contest the Governorship has almost been overlooked—almost, but not quite. There are six candidates for the Republican Gubernatorial nomination—John S. Fisher, former Banking Commissioner, who is running with Senator Pepper; former Governor John H. Tener, Representative Thomas V. Phillips Jr. of Butler, former Lieutenant Governor Beidleman of Harrisburg, Philip H. Dewey, Master of the Pennsylvania State Grange, and Frank P. Croft of Port Kennedy.

This multiplicity of candidates will help Fisher, who was a candidate the last time and withdrew in the interest of Pinchot. This time fate has linked him with Pepper. Fisher is the choice of Joseph R. Grundy, and as the situation now stands Pepper and Fisher will receive the support of all the business interests throughout the State.

It is evident that there is going to be more "trading" in this campaign than anything we have ever had outside of an old-fashioned horse market. Pepper, of course, is tied up with Fisher, but Pinchot and Vare will be in a position either to "go it alone" or make deals all over the State.

We now come to a phase of the contest that has a nation-wide interest. It is the introduction of the Coolidge Administration into a factional fight. Mr. Coolidge has not and will not say anything about the three-cornered fight. He will personally hold aloof and all three candidates have pledged themselves to support his policies. But Secretary Mellon is a Pennsylvanian. He cannot shut his eyes to what is going on in his own State. His nephew and several other inexperienced politicians tried to shape things up in the beginning, but they made such a mess of it that Mr. Mellon was compelled to show his hand.

He has come out flat-footedly for Pepper and Fisher, and all of the Mellon interests and all of the Mellon supporters will be expected to follow his lead. It is the biggest support that has come Mr. Pepper's way since he made his first announcement, and it puts him in the fight, whereas it was doubtful before if he had a Chinaman's chance. The effect of this has already been to win some followers from the Pinchot camp and some from the Vare camp. It means a fight to the finish.

A Possible False Position.

Secretary Mellon's part in the fight may place President Coolidge in a false position. With himself as the issue Coolidge could sweep Pennsylvania like a fire in an August clearing. With Pepper standing as his representative there will be no sweep. Moreover, if Senator Pepper should happen to lose, the result would be placarded to the nation as a Coolidge set-back. But if Secretary Mellon had kept his hands off, the election of any one of the three Senatorial candidates would have been called a Coolidge victory.

The primaries are to be held on May 18 and many changes can take place between now and then, but if you talk to any of the old politicians and ask them to tell you in confidence what the result will be they will say that at the moment the chances favor Vare, with Pinchot second and Pepper third. If Quay or Penrose were alive one of the three candidates would be pulled out of the fight, even if he had to be taken by the scruff of the neck, but where there is no big boss, and where all exercise the right of private judgment, the result is in doubt instead of being a certainty.

The political workers will tell you that this is going to be a "million-dollar contest." All three candidates are men of wealth. Vare and Pinchot are rated as millionaires, and the only complaint made about them is that they have hitherto shown a tendency to keep a tight clutch on their wealth. But "the boys" are clamorous for cash now and they are not willing to go into battle unless they have assurances that the commissary department is well stocked.

Will Andrew W. Mellon succeed in making himself the political leader of Pennsylvania? Will he fill the shoes vacated by Boies Penrose? These are not easy questions to answer. It is certain that the mild-mannered genius who has handled the financial affairs of the Government in such masterly fashion has no taste for this sort of thing. But so much is involved that he has no choice. It is not only the election of a United States Senator who will be loyal to the Coolidge Administration. It means, also, the election of delegates to the next National Republican Convention. His chief desire is to give a quietus to the ambitions of Gifford Pinchot. But so much hinges on the result of both the primary and general elections in Pennsylvania this year that the contest—once it is understood—is bound to attract nation-wide attention.

Choice of the Pinchot Men.

Pinchot expects to be nominated, but if he should fail to be it is generally believed that he will run for the Senatorship on an independent ticket. What will happen then?

In answer to this question the friends of the Governor point to the Presidential election of 1912 when Roosevelt as the Progressive candidate carried Pennsylvania over Taft and Wilson. It was the first time a regular Republican Presidential candidate had failed to carry the State since the Civil War. The vote stood: Roosevelt, 447,426; Wilson, 395,619; Taft, 273,305. In a word the "regular" candidate came out a bad third. That is what the Pinchot men are claiming today.

But the Democrats are saying that if there is a three-cornered fight at the general election they will surely be in a position to elect their candidates. There is something in this because they start off with at least a normal Democratic vote of 500,000, with a chance of winning recruits from the warring Republican factions. But—and there is always a great big BUT when the Democrats of Pennsylvania are considered—they may match the Republican spirit by breaking up their own party into two of three sections.

William B. Wilson of Blossburg, former member of Congress and Secretary of Labor in the Cabinet of President Wilson, is the Senatorial choice of Vance McCormick and those Democratic leaders who are likely to win at the primaries. He has no opposition, George H. Rowley of Greenville having withdrawn. There is a fight on for the Democratic nomination for Governor, the candidate at this writing being Judge William E. Porter of New Castle, Judge Samuel E. Shull of Stroudsburg and Judge Eugene C. Bonniwell of Philadelphia.

Support of the Bone-Dry.

Judge Porter will be the running mate of former Secretary Wilson and they will have the support of the bone-dry element of their party. Judge Bonniwell is on a wet platform but curiously enough his chances are not half so good as those of the other two judges. The winning Democratic candidates are likely to be dry or to run on a dry platform.

Here we have as clear a summary of the situation as is possible at the time this article is written. Pepper, Pinchot and Vare each expect to win the Republican nomination for Senator. Wilson will be nominated as the Democratic candidate. If Pinchot is defeated at the primaries and becomes an independent candidate in the general election he is sure that he will beat all of the others. If Vare defeats Pinchot and Pepper for the nomination he is perfectly confident that he can defeat Pinchot and the Democratic candidate in the general election.

No matter what the result may be, there will be more disappointed candidates than a Pennsylvania campaign has known in many decades. And the result will have far-reaching effects upon the Coolidge Administration and the next National presidential campaign.

"VIVE LE ROI!" FOR DUKE OF GUISE

New French Pretender Must Leave His Pleasant Farm for Exile

"VIVE le roi!" rings in the ears of Jean, Duke of Guise. The cry of his followers hounds him out of his native France. For the hope of royalty and the restoration of the Orleans-Bourbon line, he has accepted the pretender's load. Wrapping about him the mantle of his dead cousin, Philippe, Duke of Orleans, he prepares to depart for the exile's lot—the portion of those who claim the right to be King of France. What price that shimmering dream of place and power!

A few short weeks ago the Duke of Guise was to all intents and purposes merely an ordinary citizen of France, a gentleman farmer content to live in retirement from the world. The world was content to leave him to his choice. He has now become "heir to the throne of France." As such, he must leave his acres and his home, following a mirage. His reward is the support of a few hundred thousand royalists.

Quietly Settled in France.

When death recently ended the forty years' exile of the Duke of Orleans and his pretendership to the throne his great-grandfather lost, some doubt was expressed as to what move would be made by the next in line. The Duke of Guise was known as an eminently respectable gentleman of France, with strong Anglo-Saxon proclivities. A man of 50, he seemed already to have found his place, living quietly on his estate in the Aisne. To his Chateau de Nouvion he had brought his beautiful bride, a sister of the Duke of Orleans and of former Queen Amelie of Portugal. There three daughters and a son, now 18 years old, were born. Should the Duke of Guise claim the succession, it would mean the end of his happiness in the Aisne. Republicans had provided for that long ago.

Should Jean, Duke of Guise, step into Philippe's place he would forfeit his lands in France and his Moroccan estates. His entire family would suffer. But he was prepared. The possibility that some day he would have to make the decision became evident several years ago. Philippe, Duke of Orleans, could not live amicably with his wife. They were separated and had no children. His only brother, Prince Ferdinand, Duke of Montpensier, was constantly risking his neck in hunting and exploration trips in far-away lands and in motor racing.

Besides, it was not thought likely that Ferdinand would desire to succeed. His beautiful Chateau de Randan and his luxurious home in the Avenue Bois de Boulogne and his chocolate factory at Passy seemed more precious possessions than a claim to a defunct throne. There was gossip, too, that the war had converted Ferdinand to republicanism. Even should the visionary crown come to him, the chances were that it would pass in due season to his cousin's family.

Had not Mlle. Couëlon, soothsayer of the Rue de Paradis, prophesied that the little son of the Duke of Guise would one day be King? Two years ago all doubt regarding the succession of the Duke of Guise was dissipated by Ferdinand's death.

The early training of the Duke of Guise was planned not without consideration of his royal chances. Because France refused to make soldiers of any of the Bourbon men, he was sent to Copenhagen for military education.

In 1899 he was married at Twickenham, in the suburbs of London, with Queen Alexandra and most of the members of the reigning house of England in attendance. After that he made his home altogether in the country, was seldom seen in Paris and took no part in politics. But when the call came to head his royal line, the blood of his ancestors asserted itself. He assumed the rôle his birth assigned.

Might Go to Canada.

Philippe was never popular. His escapades and the scandals in which he was involved shook the loyalty of many a royalist.

"Pretending" is likely to be taken more arduously by Jean. If he likes country life, there are plenty of places where he can farm. He has the means to acquire a castle in Spain or an English country house. Perhaps he may turn to that ever-growing refuge of noblemen—Canada. Another member of the House of Orleans has already settled there. But none of these places will be home to a man used to the soil of France. Still, even there, as "Your Highness" to underlings, he may dream dreams that come naturally to his race; may issue manifestos and maintain a certain degree of State.

OUR TOWN AND ITS FOLK

Outside the Circus

By BERTRAM REINITZ.

WISTFUL looks and audible longings dampen somewhat the festive air that hovers at present in the afternoons and early evenings over West Fiftieth and West Fifty-first Streets, between Eighth and Ninth Avenues. The neighborhood is thronged with eager children. It is as if a whole corps of Pied Pipers were playing irresistibly melodies there. Judging from their clothing, pugnacity and vocabulary, the youngsters hail from as far west as Twelfth Avenue, as far east as Avenue A and from all the avenues in between. The circus, housed in Madison Square Garden has sounded a far flung mobilization call.

Lacking the price of admission does not discourage legions of tenement boys from making a pilgrimage to the scene. It is altogether possible that they harbor hopes that some stroke of good fortune will flick them through the turnstiles to a place quite close to where the clowns are capering and where the white horses are arching their necks and throwing high their front knees to the blaring of the bands.

They gather in groups on the opposite sidewalk and fasten a wide-eyed stare upon the brick walls, as if to pierce them with their vision and partake of the feast within. They skirt the queues of ticket purchasers and often endeavor to open up an engaging conversation with the more amiable adults in the line. The approach of a policeman usually nips these incipient friendships, however, before they can be capitalized by hopeful youngsters.

Several of the patrolmen on duty around Madison Square Garden do not enjoy their task of keeping the ticketless children moving. One of them declared that he would much prefer to keep order among striking stevedores than to feel responsible for the expressions of disappointment that cloud the grimy faces of the kiddies as he warns them away from the front of the building.

"When the kids find that they can't get in, they try to get as close to the building as they can, in the hope of hearing a few notes of the music or of catching a glimpse of an animal or something. Sometimes an especially loud trumpet blast gets out to them, and they act as if they had found a $5 bill.

"When the show is over in the afternoon, they mingle with outcoming crowds and get a line on what the trapese performers and tiger tamers did. I saw one well-dressed little fellow, who had been to the matinee, stand on the corner of Eighth Avenue and Fiftieth Street for more than an hour telling a typical Eleventh Avenue kid all about the circus. He told the story with motions and got his nice suit all dirty giving a pretty good imitation of the tumblers."

What "Happy" Sees

SEEING New York from the driver's seat of an ambulance affords a glimpse of a few phases of the city's life that are not open to view from the deck of a sightseeing bus. Answering an average of ten hurry calls a day for six years has yielded "Happy" Donovan much inside informations about the mishaps of local tax and rent payers.

"Happy" pilots a clanging machine that emerges on errands of mercy from the Holy Family Hospital on Dean Street, Brooklyn. He plunges his swaying vehicle along Smith Street as if that cobblestone-covered thoroughfare were the smoothest stretch of motor parkway and negotiates Degraw, Baltic and other slim side streets at fully fifty miles an hour.

This ambulance driver concedes that there is a sordid and depressing side to his calling, but this is offset by the heroism he often encounters in the course of a day's duties. It is characteristic of New Yorkers to grin and bear it. "Happy" doesn't know whether or not their fortitude is due to the seasoning they receive in the subway; but they invariably reveal a capacity for silent, even smiling, suffering.

He cites an instance that occurred last week. A youth who lay in the street with a fallen girder pinning his legs complained jovially that the accident had undoubtedly destroyed the newly made crease in his trousers.

"Happy" is sometimes required to make swift incursions into the once turbulent Red Hook district for reeling patients who had been successful in quenching an illegal thirst. There has, it seems, been a falling off in the number of alcoholic cases during the past year, but the breath of some of his passengers is still so strong that he almost fears to light a match in their presence.

Untiring Taxis

CRAMMING 50,000 miles of travel into Manhattan's modest area is all in the year's work of many a tireless taxicab. In fact, there are hardworking hacks that maintain a monthly average of almost 5,000 miles on the thoroughfares that vein the twenty-one square miles of the smallest and busiest borough. These cabs have a business day of twenty-four hours. They unceasingly comb the streets for customers, pausing only for lubricant, gas, tire, motor repairs, and to allow the drivers to dine.

Double, and even triple, shifts of chauffeurs keep the cars always rolling on their persistent pursuit of patronage along the livelier stretches of the 490 miles of Manhattan streets.

An executive of the city's largest cab company reports that 26,000 miles is the annual average of his firm's machines. A canvass of drivers of independently owned taxis parked along Broadway in the upper Forties reveals that several of the cars cover 60,000 miles in a year almost exclusively within the borders of the borough. One of these chauffeurs says that his sole suburban riding, in compiling his huge mileage, consisted of four trips to Coney Island.

"I understand that 7,000 or 8,000 miles a year is a good average for a family car," he said. "We get more than seven times that distance out of our boilers. I guess I could drive blindfold from Whitehall Street to East 149th without hitting a rut. I know them all. People who get sore at what they think is reckless driving by taxi drivers forget that we are professionals and that an inch of clearance looks bigger to us than a yard does to an amateur."

Spring in Bronx

RESIDENTS of the crowded community at Caldwell Avenue and East 158th Street, the Bronx, need not rely upon the return of the robin or upon the budding of the four local maples to apprise them of Spring's advent. They know that the vernal season has arrived when Dominick, the ice man, hangs a large yellow pad on a post at the top of the steps leading down to his basement place of business. Appearance of this pad is accepted as marking the restoration of the ice box and abandoning of the window sill and fire escape for refrigerating purposes.

The object of the pad is to record all orders that may be placed in Dominick's absence. His forenoon deliveries consume as much as two or three hours, and upon his return he often finds a sheet wall filled with assorted chirography. Requests for blocks of ice of various sizes may be found written in five different languages upon a single page. Dominick, who is not, and never has been, a linguist, deciphers the international inscriptions with difficulty and often seeks assistance of passersby. English, when printed, he can read—when hastily scrawled it is as unintelligible to him as the writing on an obelisk. He does fairly well with Italian scribbled by neighbors who hail from his particular province.

Dominick identifies the calligraphy of a number of his customers by its general outline, although individual words may be meaningless to him. For example, whenever he sees a sentence with funny little marks over some of the letters he knows that the Spanish lady on the top floor of the white flat house near Trinity Avenue wants a 20-cent cake of ice, be large as the price allows.

Remarks on a Showery and Otherwise Wet Week

PREMIER MUSSOLINI has the world's sympathy. He was all set to sail with the fleet for Tripoli, by the splendid gesture notifying the nations that Italy is launching out, when along came a total stranger and turned his naval holiday into a nasal one as well by shooting him in the nose. All here rejoice that a whole Congress of Surgeons was in session next door. First despatches name a Lady Somebody of England and Ireland as the culprit. Washington, D. C., April 10.—The wet disturbance that was over the large cities a week ago has advanced to Washington. Pressure is severe on Congress. The outlook is for high temperatures to continue in the States east of the Mississippi, accompanied by floods of moisture along the Atlantic Coast and Canadian border as usual.

For one day the human race smiled at Senator Marconi. London cables said that while resting in a hospital there he had been vexed out of all patience by the activities of a busy radio instrument in his room. But the inventor of wireless now notifies the grinning public that the report is grossly exaggerated; in fact, that it is false in every particular. He says he likes the radio extremely.

New England last week was a cold place for the intelligentsia, with Mr. Chapman jerked hence for his sins and Mr. Mencken arrested for selling his pretty green magazine. This Puritan wave is getting worse and worse.

Bless your loyal British hearts, gentlemen, a man up our street talked on the air for three minutes the other night and has acted like the Duke of Wellington ever since.

Peas may be planted this week. The first and most difficult step in the pleasant vernal operation is to buy the peas. Choosing a day when you can be spared from the office, station yourself in front of any garden-seed place in lower Manhattan and watch for your chance to jam in at the door. The congestion in our bulb and shrubbery shops is so severe at this time of year that you may decide eventually to wait until 1927. Having at last obtained your packet of peas, however, it only remains for you to purchase a plot of ground somewhere in the suburbs, erect a suicide fence around it and proceed with the planting as directed in the handsome catalogue.

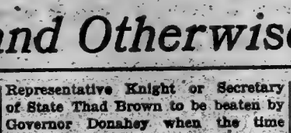
A prisoner was seated in the dock one pleasant day, as to the Judge with breaking voice his lawyer man did say: "It's wrong to shoot policemen, Judge, with you I well agree, and still my client, kindly note, is only 23. But yesterday a happy lad a-rolling of his hoop, today he trembles in the jug, or, I should say, the coop. How sad it seems that one so young, so innocent and gay should languish in confinement for a bit of boyish play!"



The members of the jury sobbed and mopped their tearful jowls. The bailiff brought some handkerchiefs and, later on, some towels. Then up the Judge did lift his voice, first glancing at the clock, and spoke these words of wisdom to the urchin in the dock: "Young man, I've heard your counsel's plea. Your youth is so extreme, it leads you past the safety mark in many a shady scheme. You need to curb this youth of yours, your actions plainly show it, and so I'll send you for a while to where you may outgrow it!"

STRANGER THAN FICTION

Flaming Old Age

By S. T. WILLIAMSON.

WE lengthen our elders' lives and then pointedly imply that we don't need them any more. About all that is left, it seems, for able-bodied old men to do in a horseless age is to arrest one another as horse thieves.

Man's life has been extended fifteen years within the last century. Still the cry is for younger men. "No has-beens need apply," is the brutal warning found in many a help-wanted column. Its cruel repetition brings more creases to wrinkled skins, and worry whitens graying hair.

Little girls not old enough to sit in a barber's chair publish verses. Youths turn out novels. Hundred-million-dollar deals are put over by youngsters at forty. A Dawes plan is administered by a stripling in his early thirties, as young as was Hamilton when he put the finances of another young Republic on its feet.

In an era when children were not heard and were raised by hand, the tyranny of elders was soothed by Horatio Alger and his school. By pluck and luck bootblacks became kings of finance within five years. Grit and wit foiled dastardly counterfeiting plots. Work and win rescued beautiful heiresses. But now, some modern Horatio Alger might give comfort to those who have fifteen more years of life to spend on the shelf than men had a century ago. Their hopes might be kept aroused by tales of how fame and acclaim are won by the superannuated.

Of course, these stories would be stranger than fiction because they would be so implausible. Fiction demands a convincing plot and a realistic atmosphere. If the truth were easier to believe, perhaps there wouldn't be so many liars.

***

AN old folks' Horatio Alger perhaps could find something in the career of a certain retired Prime Minister. He had been an unsuccessful teacher in a Connecticut girls' school, a physician without patients, an unread novelist, an unpopular journalist and as a politician a maker of enemies. Had he died when he was 75, there might have been a few lines about him in a biographical dictionary, but that would be all. Instead, at this age, he stiffened the backbone of a nation at war and became a world figure.

Then, when he had reached the heights, no irony uttered by this sharp-tongued old cynic could be more ironic than what followed. On the wall of every schoolhouse in his nation is an inscription in the Roman manner, announcing that for being the father of victory he "deserves well of his country." But having acknowledged thus their debt to him his countrymen would have nothing more to do with him and denied him the one thing he coveted, the harmless office of Presidency of the Republic. So, on a diet of hard-boiled eggs and onion soup, he now spends his days writing philosophy.

This situation would have been too sardonic for the real Horatio Alger. In fact, the modern Horatio should be a white-bearded old fellow who has struck his stride in life after sixty year or so of unrecognized merger/ rewarded drudgery, writing books signed by other people. But if he fails to find inspiration in the story of an octogenarian victor who lost, let him cross the border into a defeated country and do something with the moral that "to the victim belongs the spoils."

***

THERE, in the story of a granite-faced old man nearing 80, is material for the elderly Alger doctrine that it is never too late to make a name for one's self. Sixty years ago he was a military cadet on the threshold of forty years of uneventful soldiering. At one time he was a teacher in the General Staff College, where year after year he annihilated the enemy on paper. Next he was the umpire of some army manoeuvres and was tactless enough to inform his sovereign that the royally led troops had technically been exterminated.

Such frankness resulted in his retirement. To all appearances his life was over and the only further official recognition would be a military funeral.

Even when war broke out he was thought too old to be of service. The enemy poured across the eastern frontier, headed apparently for the capital. Then some one in the War Office remembered that in a seaport city there lived in retirement an old General whose obsession had been a theoretical campaign defending the east border. He was recalled to active duty, and within two weeks the enemy fell into the old theorist's trap and was pushed back across the frontier.

From then the old General became the nation's idol. Wooden images of him were sold all over the country. His popularity exceeded the sovereign's. Even in defeat he was beloved of his countrymen. After seventy years he had achieved fame.

After the war the country turned against all its former leaders but the old soldier, who once more, but this time voluntarily, went into retirement. And once more, when well over threescore and ten, he was recalled to service, not as soldier but as President of the new republic.

Such, in an age when men live fifteen years longer, are some of the inspirations for new Horatio Algers.

On the same day last week the cables told of two men who, after seventy and retirement, became world figures. President Hindenburg of Germany observed the sixtieth anniversary of his entering the army, and Georges Clemenceau mordlined upon death in a eulogy at the grave of an old friend.

STATE rights have come back to a speaking part on the stage of American politics after many humble years of carrying a spear in the chorus. Dominant at the founding of the United States and thereafter until the Civil War, the State rights issue lost its voice somewhat in the national expansion period, but now it has a leading rôle again.

Leaders, regardless of party, acclaim it as a vital question before the country, and call upon it to save the American people from the huge growing Federal control of matters formerly left to the individual States. Awakened to the swiftly increasing power of Washington, they echo the cry heard in the days of the writing of the Constitution.

The Central Government, they charge, is invading the rights of the States and exceeding its proper share of authority. They point particularly to the prohibition amendment and the effort at a child labor amendment as illustrating a tendency in national life which they regard as harmful.

Since the issue is coming to the fore to play a major part in the imminent political campaigns, THE NEW YORK TIMES has obtained expressions of opinion on the subject from six United States Senators, representative of New England, the Middle States, the South, the Middle West and the Far West. Their statements follow:

By JAMES W. WADSWORTH JR., Senator from New York.

I AM convinced we have reached a point in our governmental evolution where we had better pause and take stock. The proof of the necessity for this is, in my opinion, the tremendous steps toward centralization of power in Washington which we have witnessed in recent years.

A study of the situation convinces me that if matters continue a little while longer as they have been going, we shall witness the establishment in Washington of a great imperial government overtopping and submerging the power of the citizenship of the States and municipalities, with an army of bureaucrats in control; a governmental system that will gain more and more strength from its own momentum and in the end will have the power to regulate the life of every citizen of this country.

All in Seventeen Years.

Since Theodore Roosevelt ceased to be President of the United States, in 1909, we have established the Federal Trade Commission, with powers of inquisition over business engaged in interstate commerce. We have established the United States Shipping Board, with the Emergency Fleet Corporation as its subordinate. We have enacted laws to regulate the packing industry; we have adopted the Eighteenth Amendment and seen the Volstead law put on the statute books; we have passed the so-called Maternity act; we have gone into the good roads business—I might extend the list indefinitely.

At this moment we have before us another proposal seeking to give the Federal Government wider authority in the matter of education, namely, to apply to education the "Federal aid" system.

The Education Bill.

Those who sponsor this movement to apply Federal aid to education in the several States are animated with a high ideal. Nevertheless, suppose the movement succeeds and the Government in Washington contributes large sums of money to be supplied to the maintenance of schools throughout the nation. It will, of necessity, promulgate rules and regulations prescribing how the money donated by the Government shall be spent, just as it does in the matter of roads.

The Government will have to prescribe the kind of education that may be aided with Federal money; it will be called on to set up the standard of curriculum the school must meet before it can receive its allotment from the Treasury, and it will send inspectors over the country to see that the rules are followed and the standards are maintained. Visualize the tremendous power that such a system would eventually lodge in the Government at Washington.

Has the day come when the States, cities and towns of the United States are unable, or unwilling, to manage these vital matters for themselves?

If this be so, then we must be ready to abandon most of our ideals as to what is good in building up a citizenship that is self-reliant, enterprising and liberty-loving.

Opposes Bureaucracy.

I am convinced that the time has come when we must take such action as will require, from now on, that amendments to the Constitution must be submitted for ratification in such a way that the people of the several States shall have a chance to say "yes" or "no" to the proposal.

Viewed from the standpoint of a private citizen, one cannot forget that a bureaucracy is always remote; it is mysterious and often unresponsive to public sentiment, and in the end it will perish of dry-rot or corruption. We must call a halt or we shall have transformed within a very brief period the entire structure of this Government as organized by the fathers.

We shall then no longer be a Federal Union of States whose inhabitants are competent to manage their own affairs. Instead we shall have established an imperial government, our sense of responsibility will have disappeared, our initiative will be destroyed and democracy will have been wiped off the map.

By WILLIAM CABELL BRUCE, Senator from Maryland.

IT WAS thought by the Federalist that it would always be easier for the State Governments to encroach upon the authority of the Federal Government than for the Federal Government to encroach upon the authority of the State Governments. This belief has been proved false by the course of events.

In the beginning, every effort of the Central Government to expand to the full measure of its enumerated powers was resisted by the States. They even denied that the Federal Judiciary was authorized to set aside either an act of Congress or a State statute on the ground that it was in conflict with the Federal Constitution.

State Power Waning.

Comparatively few persons, we suspect, have formed any adequate conception of the extent to which the Federal authority has, in one way or another, been enlarged since the close of the Civil War. This process has gone on almost unceasingly, and but for the firmness of the Supreme Court the States would long ago have been swallowed up by the Federal Government as the rods of the Egyptian magicians were swallowed by Aaron's rod.

This condition of things is attributable in part to decisions of the Supreme Court, in part to amendments to the Federal Constitution, and in part to acts of Congress. Typical examples of such Supreme Court decisions are those sustaining the constitutionality of the Oleomargarine acts, the Lottery acts, the Pure Food and Drug act, and so on. Conspicuous examples of the amendments to the Federal Constitution which have broadened the scope of the Federal jurisdiction are the Eighteenth Amendment, depriving the States of their control over the liquor traffic, and the Nineteenth Amendment, depriving the States of their control over female suffrage.

Washington Branches Out.

Especially obnoxious to the fundamental principles that underly the organization of our State Governments are the acts of Congress based upon what has come to be known as the 50-50 system of fiscal reciprocity, such as the Smith-Lever act for the promotion of agricultural extension work; the Smith-Hughes act for the promotion of certain forms of industrial education; the Vocational Rehabilitation act for the rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise, and their return to civil employment; and the Sheppard-Towner act for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy.

Fully analyzed, the plan of matching, for certain public purposes, every State dollar with a Federal dollar resolves itself into a corrupting and spendthrift system under which the Federal Government collects a certain amount of revenue from each State, and, in the case of many of the States, gives back to the State a mere pittance of what it has collected from it, and applies the balance to public objects in other States.

Recent "Encroachments."

The Federal pick is still being applied to the foundations of State sovereignty, as is evidenced by the Reed-Curtis bill, which seeks to establish a Federal Department of Education, and the proposed constitutional amendment relating to uniform divorce and marriage laws. We have certainly drifted afar from the principle announced by Jefferson in his first inaugural: "The support of the State Governments in all their rights as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against anti-Republican tendencies."

With the immense increase of population and wealth in the United States, and the resulting extension of Federal functions and activities, and with the vast multiplication of facilities for intercommunication between the States, it was inevitable that the Federal authority should acquire a great accession of dignity, influence and power, and that the States should be thrown more or less into a common mass.

These results have also been furthered by the rise of separate groups and blocs of voters bred by the increasing complexity of our social and political life, each enthusiastically bent upon the propagation by incessant importunity of some pet object too eagerly cherished to brook delay of an appeal to forty-eight State Legislatures instead of to one national legislature.

States Asserting Themselves.

But to all appearances we are beginning to enter upon a period of powerful reaction against Federal aggression unwarranted by the letter or the spirit of the Federal Constitution; and belated as this reaction is, it is not too tardy not to promise the restoration in a substantial measure of the lost balance between State and national authority which our sagacious forefathers designed.

The rejection of the Child Labor Amendment by the unanimous vote of the Kentucky Legislature, and by the Virginia Legislature, is a most hopeful indication of a return to something like the old partition of authority between the States and the nation. The rising tide of popular disgust that unmistakably portends the termination of national prohibition is another indication of the same nature. State atrophy, Federal hypertrophy, are, at least to some extent, checked. That local self-government is the cornerstone of American liberty will again, we trust, become one of the inspiring, living beliefs of the American people.

Without it there might be such a thing in the United States as one of those powerful and domineering States which have shone and swayed for a time and then sickened and died, but no such thing as a fully trained, enlightened and contented American citizenship.

By HIRAM BINGHAM, Senator from Connecticut.

THE constant demand for more and more Federal aid menaces the foundations of our American Union. Federal aid cannot properly be granted without Federal supervision and inspection. Nobody claims that it would be right to spend the money of the taxpayers of the United States without carefully attending to the business of seeing that that money was spent in accordance with the desires of the Federal Government, which makes the appropriation.

History, both ancient and modern, shows the dangers of bureaucracy. The placing of gigantic power in the hands of bureau chiefs, with all their human limitations, is always accompanied by certain dangers and by the deprivation of certain liberties.

Founders Feared Federalism.

The extraordinary growth and the many ramifications of the power of the Federal Government as exercised through its various bureaus and commissions was never for a moment contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. They had too vivid a realization of the suffering and the injustice that can be caused by powerful Government agents who have the privilege of interfering with the private life of the people living at a great distance from them.

Well-meaning people, sincerely interested in unselfishly improving the condition of their fellow-citizens, in promoting the public welfare, in relieving suffering and in coming to the relief of the weak and the helpless, grow very impatient with communities that are not yet sufficiently awake to the need for proposed reforms.

Unable to arouse sympathetic public opinion, impatient with the representatives of these communities when assembled in State Legislatures, these well-meaning but short-sighted people have formed themselves into various societies. They maintain well organized and well paid agents, sometimes called lobbyists, to work on the sympathies, fears, vanities and susceptible hearts of members of Congress to encourage them to pass laws and make appropriations, frequently under the guise of State aid, which shall force or bribe the State Legislatures to do those things which the citizens and taxpayers of those States would not otherwise do.

Some Laws Premature.

In their zeal these worthy and unselfish citizens attempt to bring to bear all the force of organized propaganda on the heads of members of Congress, with the result that laws are passed which affect the private life of thousands of citizens contrary to their wishes and desires, just as a benevolent despotism would do. These good people forget that "law" with us and as accepted by us is not a proper means of creating public opinion so much as it is the crystallization of public opinion which has already been created.

The War of the American Revolution was fought as a protest against the inflicting of laws on people who did not desire them or on communities where the majority of the people were not in favor of them. Our forefathers rebelled against taxation intended to raise money for purposes in which they were not interested and with which they had no sympathy.

A similar conditoin of affairs exists in connection with apropriations for Federal aid. The money for Federal aid is raised by taxes in which all people have a part, directly or indirectly. The citizens of no State escape from this. And even if a State declines to accept its share of Federal aid under the conditions imposed upon it by the law authorizing such aid, it is nevertheless obliged to pay its share of the tax made necessary by the law.

I believe that this is a most dangerous tendency and that it strikes at the roots of our liberties. In general, laws intended to relieve suffering and promote the public welfare should be passed by State Legislatures, by the representatives of the communities concerned, assembled where the citizens can easily come to ask for or to protest against the passage of such laws.

If we take away from the communities the power of local self-government their ability to govern themselves will atrophy. Eventually our system of government will fail because the citizens have neither ability to think nor power to act as responsible citizens.

Let us aim to give our localities more responsibility rather than less.

Far better is it for him to be independent and make mistakes than to be free from mistakes and dependent on the wisdom of a highly centralized government. As a matter of fact a citizen without responsibility ceases to be a citizen and becomes a subject. In our country we do not want subjects; we want citizens.

By WILLIAM H. KING, Senator From Utah.

THERE is greater reason now than ever before in the history of the Republic for the political principles of Jefferson to be followed. He recognized that the same struggle would ensue in the United States that had existed in the past in all countries; namely, the struggle to centralize all political power, which would eventuate in autocratic power.

There is a rapid transference of the powers and authority of the States to the Federal Government, and with it an abdication by the people of the rights of local self-government, as well as individual rights. We are fast passing under the control of a paternalistic government, whose powers are being expanded and whose authority is crushing the States.

Restricting State Power.

There is scarcely a function belonging to the States which has not been attacked by the Federal Government, and many laws have been enacted by Congress which have weakened the States and superimposed upon them Federal authority not contemplated by the Constitution. Measures are now pending in Congress the purposes of which are to restrict the States further in the exercise of their powers, to interfere with local self-government and impinge upon personal rights.

The President is bringing to bear the power of his high office to compel Congress to pass a law creating a department of education. This department is to take over our educational system, as Bismarck had the Central Government of Germany take over the educational system of the German States. The teachers are being organized, the Federation of Labor is being mobilized and all the forces possible are being coordinated for the purpose of attacking and coercing Congress into submission to the execution of this un-American, impolitic and most dangerous plan.

Uniformity vs. Progress.

Arguments are made that the people lack uniformity, that they do not know what is for their own good, that officials in Washington can better govern them than they can govern themselves, and better determine their system of education than they can determine it for themselves.

There seems to be a mania for uniformity. The people want everybody to be orthodox in politics, in religion, in scientific thought, in culture and in every activity of life. And orthodoxy of course is what the proponents of these measures think is orthodox. They seem to be utterly ignorant of the law of evolution, of social and political and biological progress and development. They seem to be incapable of comprehending the fact that progress comes from differentiation and from diversity, not from uniformity.

Demands are constantly made that the Federal Government construct all the roads, bridges and highways throughout the United States. It is proposed to amend the Constitution so as to give Congress the power to control all persons under the age of 18 years. The States have been unwilling to give to their own Legislatures such unlimited power over children.

"Wild and Fantastic."

These same forces are demanding that the States shall have no control over marriage or divorce or the property of spouses or the children of divorced persons. It is insisted that Congress shall take charge of all matters of commerce and trade. The Supreme Court has just held that a regulation promulgated by some bureau in the Department of Agriculture has the force of law and supersedes any law enacted by any State for the protection of the agricultural products of the State.

This Government cannot stand if the pillars which support it are destroyed. It is the States which give the country and the Government stability and integrity and the chief bulwark against assaults upon the liberties of the people. When there was talk of nullification Andrew Jackson proposed a toast, "The Federal Government, it must and shall be preserved." Throughout the land there should now echo the demand, "The States, they must and shall be preserved."

By CHARLES S. DENEEN, Senator from Illinois.

THE centralization of political power in the Federal Government has been debated since the organization of the Union. Chief Justice Marshall said in 1819: "The question respecting the extent of the powers actually granted to the Federal Government is perpetually arising and will probably continue to arise as long as our system shall exist."

At first, the discussion ranged around the assertion of the sovereignty of the nation and the economic integration of the country. Regarding the former, the debate arose out of the clash of sectional interests; the territorial expansion of the country; the admission of States; the power of the Federal Government in the Territories over the slaves; the fugitive slave laws; the right of the State to nullify the laws of the Union or to secede therefrom.

Growth of Centralization.

The economic integration of the country was questioned through the opposition to internal improvements, the imposition of a tariff, the enactment of centralized banking legislation, the land subsidies for the transcontinental railways, the regulation of interstate commerce and the various acts for the elimination of monopolies and of unfair competition and like measures.

Regarding these measures, identical arguments were used by those opposed to them, and, although each of these measures aroused nation-wide interest and angry controversy, no one now opposes any of them as an unwarranted usurpation of power by the Federal Government at the expense of the State. But the debate goes on and the old arguments are put to new uses.

This is due to the vast expansion of the country and the greater changes in its character. The frontiers have moved to the Pacific Coast. A movement has been made from the farm and village to the great cities. The industrial revolution has made greater changes than any political revolution that ever occurred.

Our transportation systems have abolished distance and State lines, and these changes have made matters national that were local in the days of our fathers, and the Congress has been required to enact laws to meet the facts. The Congress has not developed new sources of power but has made new applications of the old authority existing in the Constitution.

How Washington Helps.

The rapid extension of the activities of the Federal Government in our day and the great variety of the powers which it is exercising have attracted general attention to its growth. One illustration of this is the Department of Agriculture, with its various agencies, relating to the forests, the weather, animal industry, plant industry, soil chemistry, biological survey, crop estimates, markets, public roads, home economics and various other bureaus. This extension of the authority of the Federal Government has met with little opposition, because of the obvious advantages and also because of the interests and power of the great agricultural population.

A like statement may be made of the Department of Labor, its agencies and activities. Likewise, the Department of Commerce has assumed functions never dreamed of before the new order of business. The same is true of every departmet of the Government.

The State has extended its authority as well. The State requires the parent to educate his child, censors amusements, inspects food, sets standards for the building of homes, taxes the automobile and the gas that propels it, regulates the rates of municipal transportaion and imposes death taxes.

The old adage that that government is the best which governs least is no longer true, because we could not live together under modern conditions without a multitude of necessary regulations. So the application of the police power of the State and of the general welfare clause of the Federal Constitution are only new applications of old authority.

But in meeting new conditions, there is a question whether the State is assuming its full responsibility. Too much has been thrust upon the Federal Government because of the inactivity or incapacity of the State. The result has been the exercise to a greater degree by the Federal Government of its powers than by the State of its powers. This has resulted in a multiplicity of Federal offices, the creation of many bureaus and the bureaucratic control which is incident thereto.

It is idle to generalize upon remedies. Under our scheme of government, each question, as it arises, must be measured by old principles. It goes without saying that Congress should enact laws which are Federal in their character and that the State should enact laws which are primarily of State concern. It is where their spheres of influence overlap and intermingle, except where concurrent, that the difficulty arises; and in such matters the State should reassert its functions and meet its responsibilities. Otherwise, the State and the nation will lose their equilibrium, which is the basis of the Federal organization of our Government.

By WALTER F. GEORGE, Senator from Georgia.

OUR dual system of government is a compromise between conflicting theories. The earlier questions growing out of the issue of State rights were submitted to war. The question now presented is how to preserve the just balance between the general and the local Governments; how to give to the one those duties which it alone can properly perform, and how to save to the many those duties which they alone can safely discharge.

Free government rests at last upon local self-government. The voluntary relinquishment by the States of their authority over their local affairs tends inevitably to weaken and destroy the capacities of the people for self-government. Breakdown in the efficiency of the general Government is inescapably incident to the undue extension of Federal operation over matters relating to the daily well-being of the people.

Washington's Vulnerability.

Local issues have been injected into national politics as a result of the extension of Federal power over personal and intimate matters relating to the daily life of the citizen. Too often methods closely akin to ward methods have been applied in national politics. Invasion by the Federal Government of the field reserved to the States not only emphasizes local questions and issues, but also leads directly to the formation of the bloc.

The duality of authority established by the Constitution is the despair of the radical thinker. It is one thing to procure favorable consideration of a measure by the Congress; it is quite a different thing to procure favorable consideration of the same measure by forty-eight States. Many legislative schemes are presented to the Congress, having to do with labor, adult and child labor, health, education and the personal and intimate affairs of the people—from the purest motives, it must be conceded. But in too many cases the proponents fail to follow through to ultimate results. They are too often indifferent to the effect upon the structural integrity of the American system of government.

The Child Labor Movement.

The people have reserved unto themselves many rights sacred against all Government. The Twentieth Amendment, submitted to the States for ratification on June 2, 1924, seems to be based upon such assumption. It was urged that the States having failed to exercise their powers, regulation and control of child labor by the Federal Government was imperatively demanded.

It must be sound in laws as well as morals to say that not even a State has the right to prohibit the lawful and useful labor of a boy which is at once helpful to him and beneficial to society. It seems impossible to read the American Constitution without a keen realization of the fact that the immemorial rights of free men were to be sacredly preserved against all governmental interference, local as well as general.

Regarding Estate Taxes.

It is now said that the tendency is back to local self-government. How far this is true is a matter of speculation. Present evidence may be deceptive. To illustrate: The Revenue act, just passed by the Congress and approved by the President, provides that an estate, in settling its liability to the Federal Government, is to receive credit for any amount the estate has paid to any State Government up to 80 per cent. of the Federal levy.

The principle of the inheritance tax is accepted as just, but it is open to any one to contend that the indicated provision of the Federal Revenue act of 1926 is a direct menace to the States.

It is suggested that if an estate is not to receive credit for the amount the estate has paid to any State Government, the Federal Government will drive the States from this field of taxation. In the opinion of those who rest the case upon this assertion, it seems to be a matter of no consequence whether the States yield voluntarily to a direct Federal subsidy in order to maintain themselves in the field of inheritance taxes, or whether the field be lost at the end of a heroic struggle by the States.

Every new bureau at Washington separates the people by a wider margin from their Government, and the acceptance of the principle of Federal aid to the States, with respect to those matters that lie peculiarly within the province of the States, must be regarded as destructive of that just balance between the Federal Government and free States.

AN ISSUE FROM THE FIRST

THROUGHOUT the whole drama of American history runs the perennial struggle between those who favor a strong central Government and those who emphasize the power of the several States. It began, in the realm of theory, when the framers of the Constitution laid out the blue print of American Government. It became a practical political issue with the rise to power of the two parties headed by Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton: Men who stand out in history as the patron saints of State rights and centralized Federal control.

Hamilton put the case for Federal domination in a speech at the Convention of New York on June 24, 1788:

"Gentlemen in their reasoning have placed the interests of the several States and those of the United States in contrast. This is not a fair view of the subject. They must necessarily be involved in each other. * * * The local interest of a State ought in every case to give way to the interests of the Union. For when a sacrifice of one or the other is necessary, the former becomes only an apparent partial interest, and should yield, on the principle that the smaller good ought never to oppose the greater one." * * *

Jefferson, in a draft of certain resolutions relative to the Alien and Sedition laws, which were probably the originals of the famous Kentucky Resolutions, put the case for State rights as follows:

"The several States composing the United States of America are not united on the principle of unlimited submission to their general Government, but by a compact under the style and title of a Constitution for the United States and of amendments thereto. They constituted a general Government for special purposes—delegated to that Government certain definite powers, reserving, each State to itself, the residuary mass of right to their own self-government; and whensoever the general Government assumes undelegated powers, its acts are unauthoritative, void, and of no force."

THE POLAR REGIONS, SCENE OF HUNT FOR THE UNKNOWN

THIS map is published as a guide for those who will follow the progress of the aerial expeditions striving to reach the Pole and to explore the great unknown area beyond. On it are shown the projected routes of the three more important enterprises—the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile Expedition, which will attempt to fly by dirigible "from Rome to Nome," making its base at Spitsbergen; the Byrd Expedition, which plans to fly by plane from Spitsbergen to Peary Land, the northernmost known land in the world, and from a base established there fly to the Pole and make a series of flights into the unknown area; and the Wilkins Expedition, which purposes to make the flight by plane in the other direction.

There are also shown on the map the outstanding achievements of other explorers—notably Peary's route to the Pole and the course followed last year by the Amundsen-Ellsworth Expedition.

Generally speaking, the shores bordering on the polar sea are nothing save an utter waste of frost-gnarled rock and gravel abandoned by ages of ice and bitter cold.

It is across this barren wilderness that these daring fliers will soon make their effort to clear up the globe's last great geographical mystery lying in the million miles of unexplored area north of Alaska and stretching clear to the Pole.

Two portals have been chosen for this feat. One is Point Barrow on the north coast of Alaska, from which Captain Wilkins proposes to hop off in his airplane; the other is Kings Bay in Spitzbergen, from which Byrd and Amundsen will soon start.

A brief look at the map will show why the Barrow-Kings Bay route has been chosen rather than any other.

Take the Asiatic side. The coast of Siberia stretches for thousands of miles east and west, often nearer to the unexplored area than either Alaska or Spitzbergen. This is the famous "Northeast Passage," which men tried for more than 300 years to pierce. Its waters are unnavigable on account of ice, and its shores reek of death, with their population of wild tribes and their gameless interior. Siberia is as forbidding for the explorers as all the terror its name connotes.

The American side is little better. North of Canada spreads in confusion that group of ice-girt islands which have been the scene of so many hardships and deaths among explorers who hoped to find among them some rich secret as reward for their labors. Thus the only practical course is the Barrow-Kings Bay route.

Logistics, or the relation of time and distance and supplies, constitute the most important problem faced by the fliers. Amundsen and Ellsworth are less concerned than any because their dirigible can cruise for several days without running out of fuel. Allowing for wind, the distance of about 2,000 miles they will have to negotiate from Spitzbergen to Alaska is well within their cruising radius. Wilkins must make a much larger gamble; for a non-stop flight across the same route even under the best conditions is perilously close to his plane's limit of fuel endurance.

Byrd frankly cannot make the whole jump without renewal of fuel. In consequence he expects to hop the 400 miles to Peary Land, return for fuel, make a second hop and then continue 400 miles to the Pole after refueling. If he can continue his exploration down to the westward into the unknown area he will probably do so by skirting the northern end of Grant Land, then out from its western extremity.

Though little has been said about disaster, such an emergency must be taken into consideration. The rough ice of the polar sea does not lend itself to an airplane landing. If Byrd or Wilkins is forced down north of Greenland the situation would be dangerous, though by no means desperate. How serious such a contingency would be can in a measure be judged from the fact that last Summer Amundsen elected to gamble on the thin chance that his plane could be launched again rather than walk back to land.

The trouble is that simply "walking out" is not enough. The ice north of Alaska is continually in motion. Wilkins would have a hard time if he tried to make his way back over it to land, although he has already had some experience in travel of this sort. Amundsen would no doubt keep to his dirigible and try to drift out in the air if his engines or fuel failed.

Further east is even more serious. If, for instance, Byrd tries to escape by walking back to the edge of the ice by Spitzbergen he cannot obtain air rescue because this ice is constantly breaking off and drifting south. While waiting for his ship to pick him up he might very well find himself sailing southward into the North Atlantic on a fragile pan of ice which would go to pieces in the first blow.

Should any of the fliers come down on the ice in the neighborhood of the Pole, or, in fact, anywhere except near their base their best bet would be to attempt escape via Greenland. Byrd, for instance, could make the north end of Peary Land and cross the icecap of Greenland in two weeks during the good Summer weather. If he were further out and to the westward he would do better to seek the north coast of Grant Land, where, at Cape Columbia, Peary left a monument. From this monument to Fort Conger, the old Greely base in Lady Franklin Bay, is but a few days' march. Thence the trip to Eskimo settlement at Etah is practicable if the party hunts seals on the way.

To obtain the news of these expeditions The New York Times and the newspapers associated with it have arranged for the establishment of two bases. William C. Lyon is traveling by dogsled to Point Barrow with a wireless outfit; his route is indicated on the map. At Etah there will be stationed the American Museum Greenland Expedition, headed by George Palmer Putnam, also equipped with wireless and ready to send aid to the northern shore of Greenland, if word of disaster comes. News of the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile Expedition, of the Byrd Expedition, of the Greenland exploration and of Mr. Lyon's adventures are being published, fully copyrighted, in The New York Times.

AMERICANS TO REVEAL SECRETS OF OLD GREECE

The Tower of the Winds, Athens.

This Once Gorgeous Treasure House of Antiquity Will Be Excavated by American School at Athens

By ALVA JOHNSTON.

IN accepting the terms of the Greek Government for the excavation of the Agora, the ancient market and meeting place of Athens, the American School for Classical Studies at Athens has agreed to tear down the houses of more than 50,000 Athenians and to dig an area of nearly thirty acres with pick, knife and brush to a depth of thirty-five feet.

These thirty acres were the ancient centre of Athenian life. Cicero describes them as "full of buildings, statues and public places of transcendent beauty." The Greek traveler Pausanias of the second century A. D. left a detailed guide-book of the area, naming a long list of temples and public buildings adorned with the works of the great Greek painters and sculptors.

Fragments of copies of figures that once stood there are among the most prized possessions of modern museums. An armless, headless and battered copy of the statue of "Peace Carrying Wealth," once in the Agora, is now in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The Demosthenes now in the entrance hall of the Bar Association in this city is a modern imitation of an ancient copy of one of the thousands of statues of the Athenian Agora.

The Trojan War, the Battle of Marathon and other great historical and mythological panoramas were painted by artists such as Polygnotus and Euphranor on the walls of buildings in the Agora.

Ancient Structures Are Gone.

Most of the structures described by Pausanias and other ancient writers have completely disappeared. Remains of the classical period have been found buried ten and twelve feet deep under soil that accumulated in the course of centuries. Most of the great treasures are known to have been carried away by conquerors: Roman proconsuls and the emperors of the East and West.

In Christian times iconoclasts of the Greek Church smashed what they could find. Athens became reduced to a mud village of a few hundred inhabitants. When in 1833 Greece gained her independence, the modern Athenians converted ancient statues, tablets of laws and architectural detail into building material. Less than a century ago marbles, which today would be worth millions, were being burned in order to obtain lime for mortar and whitewash.

In spite of looters of different types, from Xerxes to Lord Elgin, the site still holds innumerable relics of artistic interest and historical importance. The modern Greeks who have built houses over it are continually making finds in their own backyards. While excavating basements and digging pipe trenches on their own property some have been able to form important private collections.

The undertaking by the American School at Athens is not merely one of pulling down a few hundred old buildings and running steam shovels through thirty-five feet of earth. A modern American foundation company could wreck the buildings and scoop out the soil in one season. But high-speed methods cannot be used in this case. The task will require the work of hundreds of archaeologists and classical scholars for several decades.

Slow Methods of Demolition.

In the first place, the houses are not simply to be pulled down; they must be taken apart piece by piece. This is because so many ancient tablets, treaties, statues and temple fragments have entered into their construction. Most of the inscriptions can be recovered without difficulty, because the superstition of modern Greeks caused them, in using engraved monuments for building stones, always to place the inscription outside. To cover up an inscription was an act of impiety.

Many fine statues, bas-reliefs and architectural decorations have been recovered from the walls and foundations of modern Greek houses. One of the most important Greek objects now on the market in this city is a piece of sculpture found by a British officer. It had been built into a wall.

The archæologists must dissect and determine the modern houses, rather than merely wreck them. When the surface construction has been cleared away, the actual excavation is another slow and laborious process. The danger of spoiling an important bronze, statuette or jewel prevents the use of a shovel. A pick is manipulated cautiously in soil that seems to be free from objects of value. When the soil is rich, a knife is substituted and the archæologist works like a surgeon. Much of the thirty acres will have to be dug under the microscope in this fashion.

The cost will run into millions, Professor Edward Capps of Princeton, Chairman of the Managing Committee of the American School at Athens, estimated that at least $2,500,000 would be necessary. To carry out this work the American School will have not only to excavate, but also to go into the railroading and trucking business and to enter upon housing operations on a large scale.

Before leaving for Athens in March, Professor Capps discussed with American builders and philanthropists the housing problem involved. The American School will build new homes for the Greeks whom they dispossess. The Americans will not buy the land. That is to be acquired by condemnation and paid for by the Greek Government. But Athens is extremely overcrowded, and American city planners and construction experts will be organized by the American School to assist the Government.

The work will require the greatest mobilization of American classical scholars that has ever taken place. Professor Capps has obtained promises of cooperation from forty-four American universities. Greek scholars and advanced students from these institutions will have general charge of the work.

The site will be cut up into sections. One will be allotted to Columbia University, one to Princeton, others to Yale, Harvard, Pennsylvania, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and so on. It is possible that patrons of the American School will be permitted, if they wish, to invest in archaeological lots. They may finance the work in particular subdivisions. In work outside Athens the American School, which controls all archaeological permits for Americans, has permitted prospectors to choose sites where they wish to dig. Charles P. Taft has financed the excavations at Nemea, one of the great centres of the classic Greek games. J. P. Morgan has supported work at Corinth and George D. Pratt at Philus. John D. Rockefeller Jr. and the Carnegie Corporation have given large sums to aid the general work of the American School.

Will Dig Down Thirty-five Feet.

If the Greek Parliament acts in time, excavation will begin next year. Not the entire population of the thirty acres will be moved off at once. Three or four blocks will be selected for preliminary operations. After the walls and foundations have been thoroughly searched, the excavators will sink a trench approximately thirty-five feet deep, cutting down to the virgin soil which shows no traces of human habitation.

This trench will expose all the stratifications of the various levels of human occupation. The classic level is found at an average depth of twelve feet. The archaic, Mycenaean and other prehistoric levels extend downward twenty-four feet further. The depth of twelve feet represents twenty-five centuries. The total depth of thirty-five feet represents unreckoned thousands of years. It is believed that parts of Athens were occupied before 3,000 B. C., and it is hoped to unravel the full story of the famous city by studying and following the remains upward from layer to layer.

Seeking Earlier History.

In the first half of the nineteenth century many classical scholars and historians dated the beginning of Greek history from the first Olympiad, in the eighth century B. C., and held that everything before that date was lost in a fog of legend that could never be lifted.

The Greeks left no inscriptions of earlier date. Some historical facts might be retained in poetry, myth and tradition, it was admitted, but the orthodox view was that the men and events described by Homer were inventions and that the other tales of gods and heroes were to be thrown out of the courts of history. In the latter part of the nineteenth century, however, Schliemann's excavations at Troy, Mycenae and elsewhere showed that not only had the Homeric civilization existed but also that it had been preceded by a much higher Greek civilization. Since then the excavations at Crete and on other Greek islands, as well as upon the mainland of Greece, have proved that Greek history, instead of starting 2,700 years ago, according to the early nineteenth century view, must be carried back more than 5,000 years.

Who the earliest Greeks were and how their civilization started we do not know. It is hoped that excavations in what remains of the Athens of 3,000 B. C. and earlier may help to answer these questions. It is known that Crete had at that date a flourishing civilization closely connected with Egypt. According to Professor Capps, however, it is still unsettled whether the civilization of Crete is the mother or sister of the civilization of the mainland of Greece.

The lower stratifications at Athens will be searched with extreme care for evidences of Egyptian, Cretan and other influences in the early periods of the city's life. The styles and scenes on pottery, seals, bits of fresco and terra-cotta figures are the main evidences of such relationship. One small object sometimes opens a wide historical view.

The racial stock of the earlier Greeks is still uncertain. They were gradually submerged by the invasion from the north of tribes speaking a dialect of the Indo-European mother-tongue, which spread in prehistoric times from India to Scandinavia and England. The earlier immigration from the north is difficult to trace, but by the thirteenth century B. C. written references to the Achaeans (Greeks of Homer) are found in Egyptian and Hittite records.

Some time after the fall of Troy (traditionally dated at 1184 B. C.) the Achaeans in their turn were overwhelmed by the invading Dorians. Not until the seventh century B. C. does the history of Athens began to achieve definite outlines. The Greeks for some reason were slow to learn the art of writing, although eventually they put it to better account than any other ancient nation.

Remains of Classic Greece.

Whether or not excavation of the lower twenty-five feet at Athens adds much to the story of the Greeks before the age of writing, it is certain that the upper ten or twelve feet will contain remains of the greatest interest. Ruins of scores of temples, described by ancient writers, will doubtless be found under the houses of the modern town. Although the finest sculpture has probably been carried away, hundreds of broken figures are likely to be found. Museums and collectors today would pay millions of dollars for figures that Athenians once threw on a dump heap beside the Acropolis. The heap was identified as the débris of Xerxes, who had wrecked the Acropolis temples in 490 B. C. The Athenians never thought of restoring them, but simply swept them over the side of the Acropolis and set their sculptors and architects at work on new figures and temples. This process probably took place again and again on the Agora.

Ancient disasters of this kind are often the benefactors of archaeologists. An eruption of Vesuvius gave us Pompeii. The American expedition to Sardis, in Asia Minor, found ruins excellently preserved, due to an earthquake that had buried part of the city under a landslide. Hoards of coins and objects of art are found from time to time where they were carefully buried many centuries ago by their owners during sieges or on the approach of conquering armies.

There is reason to suppose that hundreds of statues, more or less damaged by conquerors, were used by the Athenians to fill in low places in the Agora. Figures of ancient gods, soldiers and philosophers will probably be found in and under the foundations of temples whose very sites are at present unknown.

Hope to Find Paintings.

The greatest ambition of excavators is to find fragments of masterpieces of the Greek painters. Not a brush stroke of a great Greek artist is known today. The Agora is the place of all places to look for them—although, lying in wet ground for centuries, most of the classic painting has probably disappeared.

Painting was considered the greatest art by the classic Athenians. Greek literature celebrates the painters even more than it does the sculptors. Some of the paintings existed far into the Christian era. Synesius, a fifth century Christian writer, reports that near the end of the fourth century a Roman proconsul removed the pictures of the Painted Porch, or Stoa. The Painted Stoa was one of scores of buildings of Agora, and some idea of the splendor of this part of Athens is given by Pausanias:

"This stoa has, in the first place, a painting of the Athenians marshaled at Oenone in Argolis against the Lacedaemonians. The battle has not been painted as having already come to the acme of the fray; not as a display of daring deeds, but rather as the beginning of the fight, with men gathering for hand-to-hand conflict. In the middle of the walls Theseus and the Athenians are fighting the Amazons. • • • Next to the Amazons captured Ilium is shown, with the kings assembled on account of the assault of Ajax on Cassandra. The painting shows Ajax himself and Cassandra with other captive women. Last is the painting of the combatants at Marathon. The Boeotians of Plataea and all the Attic force are entering into hand-to-hand engagements with the barbarians. Here both parties are on equal terms in the action. In the heart of the mêlée the barbarians are in flight and are pushing one another into the marsh. On the farther side of the picture are seen the Phoenician ships and the Greeks slaughtering those of the barbarians who are tumbling among them.

"Here, too, is depicted the hero Marathon, from whom the plain got its name; Theseus in the guise of one rising out of the ground, Athena and Heracles. • • • Of the warriors the most conspicuous in the painting are Callimachus, whom the Athenians chose as polemarch; Miltiades, one of the Generals, and the hero Echetlus.

"Here have been dedicated some shields of bronze. Some of them have an inscription to the effect that they are from the Scionians and their allies; others, smeared with pitch to defy the erosion of rust and time, are said to have been taken from the Lacedaemonians captured on the Island of Sphacteria.

"Bronze statues are set up before the Stoa: Colon, who wrote laws for the Athenians, and, a little farther on, Seleucus."

Ruins of the Temple of Zeus, in the Agora.

Other Famous Buildings.

Among the other known buildings of the Agora were the Odeum of Pericles, burned by Sulla; the Hephaesteum (called the Theseum), best preserved of all ancient Greek temples; the Tower of the Winds, the market place of Caesar and Augustus, the Temple of Apollo, the Ptolemaeum, the Stoa of Attalus, the Orchestra, the Metroum, the Tholus, the Buleterium, the Strategium and many others of which nothing more is known than the names.

The Ptolemaeum was built by Ptolemy Philadelphus, ruler of Egypt, and the Stoa of Attalus by a Syrian King. Augustus, Hadrian and other Emperors erected buildings in the Agora.

Under successive dominations during the decline of Athens, the art became more or less a matter of politics. Some quick shifts took place in the personnel of the statues. After the assassination of Caesar, figures of Brutus and Cassius were set up among the famous tyrannicides. After Philippi these were cast out, and statues of Antony and Cleopatra were set up. These in turn were quickly cleared out and replaced by images of Augustus. During the rule of Demetrius the obsequious Athenians erected 360 statues in his honor.

Statue smashing was not always done by invaders. Philip V of Macedon unsuccessfully besieged the city in 200 B. C. and destroyed works of art outside the city walls. In revenge the Athenians shattered their statues of Philip and all his ancestors.

The great looters of Athens were the Eastern Emperors. The temples of the Acropolis and the Agora yielded their most famous treasures to Constantinople. As late as the sixth century A. D. Justinian carried off pagan statues from Athens to adorn his Church of Holy Wisdom at Constantinople. In the meantime Athens had become Christianized. The Temple of Dionysius was converted into the Church of St. Dionysius and the Temple of Helios into the Church of St. Elias. In 529 Justinian closed the Athenian schools of philosophy, which had flourished for ten centuries. For six hundred years thereafter Athens was practically without a mention in history. The Crusaders took the city in the thirteenth century. Later it passed to the Venetians and then to the Turks.

The idol-smashers of the Greek Church busied themselves with the relics of the ancient city. The Jesuit Babin wrote from Athens in 1672 about the finding in the ruins of an old church of "a statue of marble, which represents the Holy Virgin holding her Son in her arms." This statute, which was really the classic statue of Peace holding Wealth in her arms, was at once broken to pieces by the Greek Catholics in their iconoclastic enthusiasm.

The Greek Government reserves the right to keep all objects found by the American excavators. The American School receives only the right of first publication and of making casts.

After being looted of her artistic treasures for so many centuries, Greece is bent on retaining such fragments of her ancient glory as may still remain. However, under the agreement, ancient duplicates of statues and a flood of antiquities of less than the first importance will find their way to American museums.

APRIL SHOWERS ONLY A TRADITION IN SOME PLACES

Legend Carried to Regions Far Removed From the North Atlantic States

WITH the rigors of Winter over, Americans turn their Spring-born fancy to a peculiar regional, even local, weather phenomenon which they generously assume is universal. This weather phenomenon is the April shower. That the name connotes a sentiment rather than an event is of little moment to the layman. It applies mainly to the North Temperate Zone of the United States and New York and New England especially.

The phrase "April showers," for instance, has no significance at all in Florida, Mexico or Cuba. The poetic saying that "April showers bring forth the May flowers" does not hold true in California, nor in many other regions. In Argentina it might be changed to "October showers bring forth November flowers." And even nearer home some of our showers come in May and then the flowers bloom in June. Some begin as early as March, and the blossoms appear in April. The question "Why April showers?" might therefore with better reason be changed to "Where April showers?"

The folklore theory of April showers derives from Geoffrey Chaucer, father of English poetry. In his prologue to "Canterbury Tales" (fourteenth century) he wrote:

Whanne that April with his shoures sote
The droughte of March hath perced to the rote.

It is a curious fact that man has taken his weather psychology with him wherever he has gone. Disregarding its place of origin, he has carried it to distant countries, across continents and up and down the meridians. But this, according to James H. Scarr, Chief of the local Weather Bureau, is as it should be, for the important thing in life is what ought to be, not what is. The phrase "April showers" is the generalization of uncoordinated local weather observations made by the early American settlers in territories north of the Ohio River, principally in the New England States and those of New York and New Jersey.

The Why of April Showers.

But we of the Northeastern States permit sentiment to outrun reality and accept the prognostication of our forefathers, though the actual month of Spring rains may not be April. To us the April shower is symbolic of the transition period when nature works the mighty transformation of Winter into Summer. Spring showers are really different from the gales and snowstorms of the Winter and from the thunderstorms and torrents of the Summer. They are peculiar to the season in which they occur.

The why of April showers is readily explained by the scientist. The heat of the atmosphere generated by the sun is the beginning of all weather. April showers usually come at a time when the ground is still wet from the melting snows and the early Spring rains. The atmosphere, even at moderate heights, has not yet had a chance to absorb much heat. As the days begin to lengthen more heat from the sun is received by the earth and the air strata next to it become warm and moist.

This air expands and rises to the colder levels of the atmosphere, where it is cooled to a temperature below its dewpoint. Condensation of the water vapor into raindrops sets in and showers begin to fall. These showers as a rule visit us early in the morning or late in the afternoon, and do not last long. Often several of them occur on the same day, alternating with sunshine. This is due to the replacement of the vapor clouds by other clouds successively formed by the upflow of warm air.

The April shower is regarded as a local manifestation of the so-called cyclone. To the lay mind the word cyclone is synonymous with hurricane or tornado. The scientist designates by the term a generally much milder but much more widespread weather phenomenon. The cyclone is an area of low air pressure denoting stormy conditions and moving around some geographical centre. In addition to this circular movement it has a bodily movement, traversing territories from a thousand to three thousand miles long. Stretches of high and low pressure areas pass across the United States in constant succession from west to east at velocities ranging from twenty miles an hour in the Summer to thirty miles in the Winter.

In contrast to cyclones or large areas of low barometric pressure the April shower is a local phenomenon of short duration, falling at a rapid rate, causing slight precipitation. Although each shower is local, a sufficient number of them may occur to bring about the wetting of a whole State. These showers decrease as the season rolls on. They disappear by Summer and again begin to fall in Autumn. A shower usually extends over a territory not more than ten or fifteen miles long and a half mile wide.

Splitting Overgrown Raindrops.

Lightning which sometimes accompanies the shower is a manifestation of electric charges of opposite kinds which find themselves too near each other. These charges, scientists say, are produced during the expansion and cooling of warm air by the splitting of overgrown raindrops. The globules of water, growing larger and larger, are for a time prevented from falling by the upward flow of rising air currents. Owing to gravity, a point is finally reached where the limit of cohesion of the drops is passed and then they break up.

The larger drops remain at the bottom of the cloud or fall to the earth, while the smaller ones are carried to the cloud tops. The larger drops are charged with positive electricity and the smaller ones with negative. The electricity of the earth is negative. The result is a positive electrical charge passing between two negative charges. These charges become more and more powerful. The difference in potential soon becomes so great that a discharge or flash occurs. The crashes of thunder heard along with the splashes of the shower are caused by the sudden expansion of the air due to the heat generated by the lightning.

Because of their pronounced characteristics, observable over a large area, rains of low pressure are easily predictable. Not so with the small storms of which the April shower is the Spring variety. They are the result of a most delicate balance of conditions of temperature and pressure, and the slightest change in these is sufficient to make or unmake the condition favoring precipitation. This accounts for the difficulty of forecasting Spring showers and determining the territory in which they will fall.

To the mind of the ordinary observer April showers stand for a change from one type of precipitation to another. They are warm showers instead of cold. They are also associated with the fact that they preceded the appearance of vegetation. As pointed out by James H. Kimball, meteorologist of the Weather Bureau, local showers are weather characteristics of the western side of the Atlantic, where the change from Winter to Summer is not so abrupt as in other regions.

Most of our American Atlantic Coast weather comes from inland where the air, in passing over warm ground, has a chance to "warm up." For this reason our region has four fairly well defined seasons, Fall and Spring being in fact transitions from Summer to Winter and vice versa. In the British Isles, north France and along the eastern coast of the Atlantic the situation is different. There weather changes come direct from the vast expanses of the ocean; the change from cold to warm weather is more sudden.

Habits of the Weather.

Weather, meteorologists say, has a tendency to repeat itself. A rainy, dry or cold day is apt to be followed by another rainy, dry or cold day. Being the result of a combination of conditions, such as pressure, temperature and humidity, it will continue as long as these fundamental conditions remain unchanged. Weather may thus be said to acquire habit. If conditions favor the formation of a storm or any other change in weather in a certain region and its passage to another region, a series of such changes may occur, producing the same cycle of weather for a period of from two weeks to two months.

This year, according to the Weather Bureau, Spring is late. In our temperate zone the frost was still in the ground on April 1. There was little evidence of growth, except where more than the usual amount of sunshine is received.

N. Y. CENTRAL IS 100 YEARS OLD

First Trains of the Mohawk & Hudson, as It Was Then Known, Were Drawn Part Of the Way by Horses

THE New York Central is rounding out its first century. April 17, to be exact, it will celebrate its hundredth birthday.

Looking back from this day of trains which make the New York-Chicago run in twenty hours, the doubts of a century ago seem to belong to some dark age of superstition rather than to any period of the life of the United States. It was then generally believed that the new steam railway was impracticable except for level country and on straight tracks, and that grades requiring literally auxiliary horse power would prove an almost insuperable obstacle. And canals, which had recently been established in popular favor, were able to carry larger burdens and cost less to build and operate.

So little faith could be summoned to the aid of the new method of transportation that in the first fifteen years after the grant of a charter to the Central's first ancestor, the Mohawk & Hudson Rail Road Company, nearly double the number of miles of canals were built in this country in comparison to railroads. In fact four years were needed to raise the modest initial capital of $300,000 for the M. & H.

That "Rail Road"—as distinguished from an ordinary highway—was chartered by New York April 17, 1826, to run from the Mohawk River at Schenectady to the Hudson at Albany. The "single or double rail road or way" might be operated "by the power of steam, of animals, or of any mechanical or other power, or of any combination of them, which the said corporation may choose to employ," and be of suitable width and dimensions.

Horses Drew First Cars.

Stockholders and directors were to be jointly, severally and personally liable for all debts of the company, to which was granted the exclusive right to build railroads out of Albany, but not elsewhere in the State.

The Mohawk & Hudson Rail Road Company commenced to build about Aug. 1, 1830. For thirteen years horses drew the cars from the tollhouse in Albany to the first incline, up which the trains were drawn by ropes. Then the locomotive hauled the cars over twelve miles of level and straight road to the Schenectady incline, from whose foot horses pulled the train to the Schenectady tollhouse.

By 1837 the cost of operation was divided in three nearly equal parts. Stables and horse power cost $14,-683.15; stationary power, $12,792.25, and the two locomotives, fuel, wagons, wages, repairs of engines, &c., $17,-022.21.

It was soon found that if a locomotive was to surmount grades and negotiate curves it ought not to be equipped with four equal-size wheels. Small wheels at the front and the principal weight concentrated over large drive-wheels made it possible to abandon the hauling by ropes in 1844.

The company soon gave up its rails "upon rigid foundations to be set below the frost line" and adopted an elastic roadbed with some give under each passing wheel. The original track was laid upon granite blocks with three-foot centres, set in broken stone, to which were bolted pine longitudinal stringers about twenty feet long.

The rails could carry only the lightest engines and loads greater than two tons drew or broke the spikes holding the iron to the wooden stringers, so that "frequently the facing ends of the rails (snake-heads) sprang up above the centre of the following wheel and curled through the floor of the car."

So the present form of T-rail was gradually evolved. In 1847 the company was required to lay iron T-rails, under penalty of suspension of its dividends over 1 per cent. per annum and the ultimate forfeiture of its charter.

The company slowly—and painfully for the passengers and enginemen—learned that it must have springs under its coaches and engines.

The official opening of the Mohawk & Hudson Railroad, featured by a grand excursion from Albany to Schenectady, with the De Witt Clinton hauling the five-coach train, took place on Sept. 24, 1831. But would-be passengers did not have to wait that long for their first ride in the State of New York behind a steam locomotive. The De Witt Clinton, built at the West Point Foundry, was taken from a boat at Albany on July 25, put on the road on July 27 and tried out on July 30 and again on Aug. 8.

Passengers were taken aboard for the first time on Aug. 9. This trip was free for those brave souls who dared to ride. The train consisted of two Concord coaches with special wheels to fit the rails and five flat cars with benches for passengers, followed by a second section of flat cars drawn by horses.

These cars were connected by three feet of chain, and the engine burned wood without any spark arrester. As the locomotive started, the play of the couplings almost shook the train and its passengers to pieces, and stopping on a down grade was even worse. So the passengers wedged the cars apart with three-foot logs of wood. The engine began to belch forth cinders and fire brands, and the passengers on the coach tops had to put out the fires which were started in their clothes and straw hats. A few raised umbrellas, but these lasted only a few minutes.

A Terrifying Spectacle.

All the neighboring farmers drove to the railroad side to see the new mechanism, but when the fire-belching engine came along, they stayed not on the order of their going; for every horse, on the approach of the new monster, turned and started for home.

The locomotive covered the twelve miles in sixty-six minutes, and the horse-drawn section which followed in ninety-three minutes. Such high speed was then believed impracticable unless the road was perfectly straight and level.

At first the maximum speed was thirty miles per hour for short distances. This increased until in 1836 a run was made west of Schenectady at the rate of a mile a minute; but this required the road's three best engines, the Kingfisher, the Mohawk and another, drawing only five small coaches. All locomotives were named like boats instead of being numbered, and were elaborately trimmed with brass, which the firemen kept bright. Commodore Vanderbilt stopped this practice, ordering the engines painted black and numbered.

The next important page in the history of the New York Central system was its growth westward from Schenectady. After 1831 other and independent railroads were built, frequently without physical connection. Eighty-five years ago travelers had to change cars and freight had to break bulk at the junction of these short, independent roads. Twelve hours were required to go from Utica to Albany—100 miles—in 1837.

Many Lines Consolidated.

By consolidating ten different railroads in 1853 the New York Central Railroad Company was formed, with about 300 miles of through line from Albany to Buffalo and Niagara Falls—then the longest railroad in the world; thus realizing the toast at Schenectady at the opening of the Mohawk & Hudson—"The Buffalo Railroad—May we soon breakfast in Utica, dine in Rochester and sup with our friends on Lake Erie."

The Hudson River Railroad was completed from New York City northward to Albany and placed in service Oct. 1, 1851. Eighteen years later it was consolidated with the New York Central Railroad under the corporate title of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad. Commodore Vanderbilt's great ideal was long haul of through freight, without breaking bulk, upon lines under the same management. By 1875 the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern and the Michigan Central were under the same control as the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad.

By the end of 1926 the original Mohawk & Hudson seventeen-mile combination of horse, railway, inclined planes and steam railroad had grown, by consolidations, purchases and leases, operating agreements and other methods, until the resulting system, under the name of "New York Central Lines," owned or controlled and operated the lines of 560 original companies in twelve States.

The New York Central Lines have an aggregate of 12,000 miles of main track. The total capital stock outstanding is $963,630,897; the funded debt $1,162,379,305.

NASH AJAX SIX

Lead the World in Motor Car Value

March! 16,265 Cars

Greatest Nash Month—Greatest Ajax Month

February—with Nash-Ajax sales totaling 14,148 cars—set a new high mark for both Nash and Ajax—but March with 16,265 cars swept beyond even that great record.

And still factory production was not sufficient to fill added bona fide March orders for 1518 cars.

For Nash it was the 19th consecutive month that sales have exceeded the figure achieved by the corresponding month of the previous year—except for November, 1925, when production was slowed up to bring into manufacture the new "Enclosed Car" motor.

This great and growing national trend among buyers toward Nash and Ajax cars is assuming the proportions of a veritable landslide.

A New World's Record and A Promise Fulfilled

Some three months ago General Motors startled the automotive industry by entering into the field of low cost sixes with a car of unquestioned quality.

Thus sponsored, the Pontiac Six carried to the public the promise of mature engineering and design proved beyond all peradventure of doubt.

This, in itself, was a radical departure from the industry's precedent.

Never in its seventeen years of leadership had General Motors announced a new car that represented over three years of development on the part of the corporation—three years, of which a large portion was spent on the General Motors Proving Ground, a natural testing laboratory unequalled in the industry.

Despite the almost sensational lowness of the Pontiac Six price—

—despite the entirely new order of beauty it represented with its superior Fisher closed body—

—despite the exceptional performance provided by the largest engine used in any six priced below $1000—

—there was emphasized and reiterated this very vital fact:

General Motors did not present the Pontiac Six until it had been brought to mechanical and structural perfection; until its design had been proved; and then approved by the ablest engineering staff in the entire industry—all of which was made possible by subjecting the Pontiac Six to a course of development that for thoroughness and rigor, has literally and truthfully never before been approached in any new automobile!

This was General Motors' specific and implied promise to those who were seeking a low-priced six of high quality.

And that promise already stands fulfilled—has already been accepted at face value by the entire motor car buying public—

So spectacular has been the success of the Pontiac Six that, in the first three months of its existence more than 10,000 cars have been produced and sold—A World's Record for a new car. And before midsummer, Pontiac Six production bids fair to exceed any previous record scored by any new car during its entire first year.

To see the new Pontiac Six—to revel in its exhilarating performance and amazing roadability, is to undergo an experience the like of which you have never undergone in any car of comparable cost.

Oakland Six, companion to the Pontiac Six, $1025 to $1295. All prices at factory.

NEW L. & N. HEAD SAYS RAILROADS ARE SOUND

Whitefoord R. Cole Discusses Present Problems and Points Out That Roads Must Continue to Expand With The Country — Praises Act of 1920

WHITEFOORD R. COLE, recently elected President of the Louisville & Nashville, one of the most prosperous of our carriers, is an unusual type of American railway executive in that he comes from a railroad family.

Most railroad Presidents in this country—in fact, virtually all the heads of important Eastern roads—came into the business from the outside and rose to executive positions after service as clerks, stenographers, engineers and firemen. Not so Mr. Cole. He inherited his mantle and then proceeded to make a record for himself and his subsidiary road which brought him the Presidency of the L. & N., the controlling road, succeeding the late W. N. Mapother.

His father, Colonel Edmund W. Cole, was President of the Nashville & Chattanooga, now the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis, a subsidiary of the Louisville & Nashville. When during the Civil War Federal troops moved to occupy Nashville, Colonel Cole sent his road's locomotives and rolling stock within the Confederate lines, where he operated them until the war was over. After Appomattox he brought the rolling stock back to Nashville and reconstructed his road.

Always a man of means, the younger Cole would doubtless have occupied a prominent position in Tennessee had he given only a passing interest to railroading. But he inherited from his father a love of the work and devoted much of his free time to a study of broader problems of the railroad business. Mr. Cole was born fifty-two years ago, and when only 26 he was elected a director of his father's road.

In 1917 he became Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis, and a year later its President. He piloted his road through a number of lean years following Government operation and continuing through the railway shopmen's strike, until it became a dividend-paying road with a record for safe handling of traffic.

Mr. Cole's Wide Interests.

Colonel E. W. Cole was keenly interested in educational and philanthropic work in Tennessee. The son has carried on his father's work and is regarded as one of the outstanding men of the South. Educated at Vanderbilt University, he is now Chairman of the Board of Trustees of that institution and is also a director of the Carnegie Institute. Moreover, he is identified with numerous financial and commercial enterprises in Nashville, his home city. Those who know him say that he is a man of democratic ideas in his relations with business associates and employes. His chief recreations are hunting, fishing and horse racing. He has often been seen at the Kentucky Derby.

Mr. Mapother, who died in Panama while on a trip with Mrs. Mapother and with Mr. and Mrs. Cole, had a comparatively short administration as head of the Louisville & Nashville and was cut off before many of his plans had been carried out. Railroad men expect Mr. Cole will continue to spend large sums for yard facilities, double tracking and realignment of the Louisville & Nashville to provide for the road's greatly increased coal tonnage.

The chief problem facing the new executive is that of constructing a connecting link with the Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio, which has been leased jointly by the Atlantic Coast Line and Louisville & Nashville. It will also be necessary to coordinate operation with that road.

Outlines His Policy.

Mr. Cole himself says that he will follow the policies of the late Milton H. Smith, a former President of the Louisville & Nashville, upon which Mr. Mapother built. "I shall feel that I have made a success if I can carry on as he did," Mr. Cole remarked a few days ago.

In the problems connected with the relation between railway and employe Mr. Cole has taken a conspicuous part at meetings of railroad Presidents. When the Association of Railway Executives met in New York a few weeks ago to discuss the Railway Labor act Mr. Cole was chosen to represent the majority opinion of the railroad heads in the introduction of motions.

"Railroads have problems, like any other business," said Mr. Cole. "Some of them are technical, some legal, some financial, but all of them are in the hands of capable specialists who are steadily working out more and more satisfactory solutions. Improvements in efficiency and increased economy of the last five years show just how capably they are doing it.

"I don't like the phrase, the 'railroad problem,' but if there is one it lies in maintaining an adequate revenue to make the improvements that the growing commerce of this country demands. Things have been going better with the railroads for some years past. Revenues have been larger. Expenses have been larger, too, but the margin between them has been slowly improving ever since 1920.

"This improvement is not the result of skimping service or of cutting wages. It comes from increased efficiency that costs no one a cent. The margin is still considerably below the 5% per cent. that the Interstate Commerce Commission says is a fair return on the value of the carrier property, but it is better than it was—although it must be borne in mind in this connection that when railroad earnings are analyzed it is seen that they represent barely the fair return on the tentative valuation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, made six years ago.

Railroad Growth Is Constant.

"In other words, little or nothing is being earned yet on the several billion dollars invested in railroad properties during the past six years, and without which neither the present efficient operations nor improved earnings would have been possible. It is proper to state that these improved conditions have been brought about despite reductions in individual freight rates aggregating many millions of dollars.

"The danger in the situation is that people who are not closely informed will feel that the present improved conditions assure adequate transportation service; that the railroads are finished and don't need to grow any more. The railroads will never be finished until the country is finished. They must continue to increase their capacity and to improve their efficiency from year to year. To do that requires all the credit that ample revenues can provide.

Florida Reads a Lesson.

"We have had in the South during the past Winter a perfect example of the necessity of continually increased capacity. The traffic into Florida practically doubled in a year. The railroads serving that State had foreseen a large increase and made large expenditures to meet it, but no sum that could have been spent in so short a time would have doubled their carrying capacity. The resulting congestion, delay, loss and expense to everybody concerned is history now.

"The same sort of thing that happened suddenly in Florida is happening more gradually in the country as a whole all the time. Neither the railroads nor the people can plead surprise. We know that the traffic demands will double every fifteen or twenty years and we know what it takes to meet the increased demand. The only thing that stands in the way of providing it is that the roads have not always the credit to make the improvements.

The Shippers Pay.

"Not the least of our problems in the railroad business is to secure an adequate recognition of these facts from the public we serve. Growing traffic means heavier demands; heavier demands require improved facilities; improved facilities cost money, and the money or the necessary credit depends on adequate revenues. If the improvements are made, they pay for themselves by lowering the cost of railroad operation or by speeding up the movement of traffic. If they aren't made they are paid for many times over by the users of the railroads.

"It is the users of the railroads who pay, for in the United States we expect the man who uses rail transportation to pay all the costs of producing it. That isn't true of some other forms of transportation. The user of a water-way, in his capacity as user, pays but a small part of the total cost of moving business on it. The balance is borne by the taxpayers. The same thing is true to a considerable extent of highway transportation.

"I am not decrying these modes of transportation, of course. They have their place in a co-ordinated scheme of things, although I fear that there are many assumptions of the superior economy of inland waterway transportation, for instance, that would not stand up if subjected to an analysis of the total cost of the business, instead of just the mere boatman's costs.

"The national policy toward the railroads as embodied in the Transportation act of 1920 is, I believe, the wisest the country has yet adopted, and has been amply justified by the results obtained under it.

"I should say the chief need of the railroads at this time is to be left to work out their own salvation under this national policy without hindrance or interference from ill-considered attempts at further legislation."

WEIGHT TABLES REVISED FOR CHILD HEALTH TEST

Charles K. Taylor's Examination of 15,000 Children Shows That Ratio of Pounds to Height Does Not Always Apply —Type Differences Must Be Considered

THE old-fashioned idea that the health of a child may be judged by the relation of its weight to the average weight of others of the same age is now being questioned. Rotundity or angularity of form, that is, weight in excess of or less than the average does not, it is held, signify over or undernourishment.

"It is type and not weight that counts in the judging of a child," says Charles K. Taylor. He classifies children in three main groups—slender, medium and heavy—the type resulting from heredity and not from feeding.

Mr. Taylor, director of educational research at the Carteret Academy in Orange, N. J., has devoted many years to the study of children, their education, and the relation between mental and physical efficiency. A sound, strong body with a normal muscular development is bound to result in greater mental and moral stamina, he concludes. His opinion is based on the examination of more than 15,000 children.

More Than One Normal Type.

Mr. Taylor began his investigations several years ago at the Speyer School, run in connection with Teachers College. Here he obtained his first data concerning the relationship of mental and physical efficiency.

"I went more deeply into the subject when, the following year, I went to the University of Pennsylvania to enter the department of psychology," he said. "I interested myself in the study of nutrition, and was placed in charge of the physical measurements of boys and girls in school feeding experiments."

At that time Mr. Taylor accumulated some of the material that led him to combat the popular theory that there is only one normal type of build, which is the general average of all. "It is an anthropological fact there is more than one normal type of human physique," he said. "Such being the case how can any sound conclusion be drawn from average weights?"

Mr. Taylor commends those who have devoted time and energy to establishing averages but does not agree with the contention that an individual is "underweight" if he falls by 7 per cent. to reach the general average weight for a stipulated age.

Boys and girls in this class are often naturally and healthily slender. They are of such a nature that no rational feeding would make them heavier, unless directed to producing a "fat" child. It happens, too, that a child may be of average weight yet subnormal physically.

Disregarding the popular definition of underweight, Mr. Taylor suggests that "a child is underweight when its weight is below what it should be for the particular individual's type of build."

Pounds and ounces do not enter into the question, for a child is normal if it is healthy, Mr. Taylor asserts. In his opinion the important thing is to establish the state of a child's well-being by medical examination. "A doctor, not weight, can ascertain whether or not the subject is suffering from malnutrition."

Mr. Taylor's work carried him one step further—he discovered that many youngsters who seemed to be in the best of health had poor muscular development. "The value of strong musculature is greater than many suppose. It not only impels the possessor into beneficial exercise but there seems to be a relationship between physical and mental efficiency," he says.

After his studies at the University of Pennsylvania Mr. Taylor sought more extensive fields for the confirmation of his findings, and obtained the cooperation of Dr. Martin Brumbaugh, Superintendent of Schools, in Philadelphia. Dr. Brumbaugh granted him permission to go into the public schools and to apply his tests to the students.

Tables for Different Types.

Disregarding the age element, Mr. Taylor worked out tables on a height-weight basis—or on what might be termed a physical type of build. The tables register five classifications, those used for types that are slender, medium-slender, medium, medium-heavy and heavy. Mr. Taylor reports that his height-weight tables will apply to about 95 per cent. of boys from 8 to 16 years of age, inclusive, and even those from 16 to 18 or 19. Standardized statistics for girls are somewhat more complicated because of the marked difference in the physical development of individuals in the pre and post adolescent periods.

In the Taylor tables all unnecessary measurements are eliminated. "Of what use is it to get the circumference of an ear, since it cannot be altered?" he asks. "I measure only those factors which can be changed by training—the girths of chest, waist, thigh, calf and arm." He places strength tests in the discard, because they show fluctuations from day to day.

To the school child, Mr. Taylor's system of standardization becomes like a competitive game. Each pupil, in the institutions where it has been adopted, keeps a score card showing its advance or retrogession, as the case may be. The normal condition is designated as 100. As measurements go above or below the standard for the same height and weight, points are added or subtracted.

The chart of their gains and losses places before the children a graphic picture of the relation their condition bears to a desirable standard. Minuses uncover points of attack. Boys or girls can attain par if they want to, Mr. Taylor assumes. In the course of his studies he has evolved a series of physical exercises calculated to improve the scores.

Ideal Score Is 120.

His system combines mental and physical training. "I learned years ago from Sandow that resistance, or the playing of one muscle against another, is the most effective way of gaining strength," Mr. Taylor said in explaining the exercises he advocates.

In the Carteret Academy and in the Beard School of Orange—the former is attended by boys, the latter by girls—Mr. Taylor has recorded a steady rise in physical standards during the four years of his association with the two institutions.

The ideal type is reached at a score of 120. A 16-year-old lad in the Carteret Academy has achieved 162 points; he is an honor student and stands at the head of his class. "It is my experience," said Mr. Taylor, "that, in an overwhelming majority of cases, when the charts show mounting scores, the teachers report a proportionate improvement in mental ability and in character stamina. Effective mentality seems, in the long run, to go with effective physique."

The Taylor standards have been accepted in widely separated institutions, from a New England boarding school to a ranch school in New Mexico. They have been taken up by Y. M. C. A.s, and are now being used in numerous Summer camps.

SPIRIT SURVIVES DEATH, SAYS SIR OLIVER LODGE

British Scientist in London Address Reaffirms His Conviction That Life Continues in New Forms After the Earthly Body Is Laid Aside

SIR OLIVER LODGE gave his latest views of life beyond the grave in an address in London last month. His audience filled Christ Church, Greyfriars, although the hour was a mid-week noon. A copy of his speech has just reached this country and is presented here in part.

By SIR OLIVER LODGE.

DEATH seems rather a gloomy subject, but I do not want it to be gloomy. There is something sorrowful about it. There is something sorrowful about emigration. When a youth is starting for a distant country he may not be sad, but his relatives are; and yet they may have hopes that it will be the beginning of a bright and useful and prosperous career. It is of the nature of an adventure. It is not by any means all gloom. There is the pathos of parting, but there is hope and joy also.

Now, to understand what death is we must first know what life is. Life is a very difficult thing to define. We know something about it, however. We know that it is not a form of energy but that it is a guiding and directing principle. It uses energy and it uses matter, but it does not seem itself to belong to the physical frame of things at all. We are living in a blaze of energy from the sunshine, and we have the power of directing it.

Spirit in Matter.

That life is not energy is seen by the fact that a seed, for instance, can give rise to countless generations. There is nothing conserved about it, no limiting quantity. One acorn could grow an oak, and thereby thousands of acorns, and each one of them a fresh tree, and so on. It is like the influx of something from outside, as if we were tapping an infinite reservoir of life which can by proper arrangement be brought to interact with matter for a time, and then depart whence it came.

It is like something condensing on the planet, utilizing the matter and the energy and then going away. Meanwhile, it controls matter, planning and willing and designing and constructing.

Under the influence of life, things are produced which otherwise would not have occurred, from a seashell to a cathedral. The product of life immensely varies, from a blade of grass to an oak. Life produces phenomena from a firefly to an electric arc, from the song of a cricket to an oratorio. They are all facts of life in its interaction with matter.

It does not exert force, yet it contrives that force is exerted and things are moved. It moves a train, for instance. A train is propelled by a locomotive, but the general manager determines when it shall start and where it shall go. That is the way life acts. It drives a train like the organizer, the general manager; not like a locomotive.

What Is a Body?

Also, life hopes and loves. It has any number of psychic attributes which do not belong to the physical frame of things. But, in order that life may interact with the physical frame, it is provided with a body. Now, what do we mean by a body? We mean a mode of manifestation, an instrument.

A musician may have music in his soul, but he requires an instrument to display it. As the violin is to the musician, so is our body to our soul. We have constructed the body; unconsciously, it is true, in accordance with natural processes. We have put the particles of food together in this particular shape. No doubt the shape means something. There is a form, a form which I believe persists; but it has arranged the particles of matter in this form for the present, seventy or eighty years, or what not.

There is an intersection of a psychic element with a physical element. Is it likely that the psychic element that plans and wills and hopes and contrives and loves and designs is limited in its mode of manifestation, in its activity, to a certain chemical compound, especially to the compound known as albumen? To ask the question is to answer it. The idea is absurd that it should be thus limited. We know of it in this particular mode of action, but it may have an infinity of other modes of action that we do not know at present.

Bodies of Ether.

For a time we ourselves are provided with the instrument which we call the body, and at present it is made of matter. It is easy to conceive that a body might be made of other things. You may have musical instruments of all kinds. They are material, it is true. We only know of one kind of body at present; this that is made of matter, too. We must not dogmatize and say that no other mode of manifestation is possible.

There are other things besides matter even in the physical universe. There is the ether of space; and it is quite conceivable, indeed, I think it likely—but that is speculation at present—that we may have instruments in the future made of ether, made of some other substance than matter. If they were, they would not appeal to our senses, because our senses limit us to matter.

We are very limited in our outlook on the universe, owing to our being constrained to live on the surface of this planet, with senses derived from the animals, which do not tell us very much about the universe, but tell us enough to carry on with—the same senses as the animals possess.

Death Interpreted.

But this connection of matter with the psychic element which dominates and uses it can be separated, can be terminated, and that is death. Death is separation, separation of soul and body, separation of the psychic element from the material element. Death is not extinction; it is merely going out of our present ken; it is separation.

Now, whatever you do about regarding the body with emotion, don't regard the grave with emotion. Think about the grave as little as possible. There has been too much superstition about graves. When in "The Blue Bird" play Maeterlinck says, "There are no dead," he means, or ought to mean, there are no dead in the churchyard. They are not there; they are somewhere else.

I have never been to see my boy Raymond's grave in France. He has asked me not to. He says: "I take no interest in that grave. I never was in the grave in my life," he says. If people would get over that trouble about interment and about lying there waiting for a general resurrection, all those kinds of superstitions, medieval superstitions, they could begin to regard death as more like what it is, an adventure, an episode that is bound to come, something that we may be ready for, welcome when it comes, not be afraid of.

Fear is no use. We do not fear when we are going to emigrate; we gird up our loins and enter upon the fresh country, fresh state, fresh conditions, with interest and not with apprehension. That is how I would urge you to look forward. We shall change our state, our condition.

Of course, about the future state there are many questions that may be asked, and they are easier to ask than to answer. They tell us that they have bodies, not material bodies. What do I mean by a body? I said what I meant—an instrument of manifestation, an instrument not made of matter, made of something else, but solid, substantial, just as good as their old bodies, rather better. They are pleased; they say they would not come back for anything. They have moved on.

As to space, I do not know about space. They tell us they are all round about us, with us much more than we know; it is only that they do not appeal to the senses. In the daytime the stars are all there; we do not see them. I suppose a child might think they had gone out of existence and come back at night. They are just as much there at one time as at another. Life is continuous.

Death Is Change.

The conditions of the whole universe are unchanged by death. Death is a subjective thing; it belongs to the individual. His outlook, his awareness of the universe has changed. He was aware of this set of things, he becomes aware of another set of things. They are there all the time. We call it the next world, or the future state; but it is this one universe. The universe is one.

But there is a partition, and now we are aware and known on one side of the partition and not on the other; then we shall be aware and known on the other side and perhaps quite as clearly as on this. There is another world, many other worlds there may indeed be besides that which we can attain to now. The world of our senses is a very small part of the universe as a whole.

You may say, "How do we know that these people still exist?" I cannot doubt it, for I am in frequent touch with them. You cannot doubt the existence of people with whom you can talk. Even if you can only talk on the telephone or by wireless, you get to know them. They continue.

Life is not a thing that peters out and stops. It goes on under different surroundings. It has many modes of manifestation; this is only one of them. We shall still have bodies, still have forms that can be recognized. We are all one family; the link of affection is not broken—one family for mutual help and love. Love bridges the chasm. Love has restored the sense of communion across the gulf of death.

A Scientist Convinced.

Looking into the matter with the cold eye of science, I say there is nothing to be said against that, and there are many facts to support it. I have by evidence gradually become convinced. I do not expect everybody to accept what I say. But I assure you that to the best of my scientific belief what I am saying is the truth—that life is a permanent thing that interacts with matter for a time and then leaves it and goes on under other surroundings.

Necessarily happier? Ah, that I do not know. That depends upon what we have done here, how we have made use of our opportunities. We have to go on; we may go up, we may go down. That is another subject—ethics.

Life is a great responsibility. We take nothing with us except ourselves, but we ourselves go on in a fresh condition, amid fresh surroundings; not in a bodiless condition, in a full-bodied condition still. We have got so accustomed to this particular mode of manifestation by matter that we can hardly imagine any other—some of us cannot. I find it easy to imagine others, because in physics we deal with a great number of things that do not appeal to the senses, but are just as real as those that do; more real, in a way.

For the nature of matter itself is being analyzed, until—well, I think I am right in saying we hardly know what matter is. All these things have to be explained, and almost explained away. If we could see this matter around us with the eye of science, it would not look a bit like what it does ordinarily—solid and substantial. It would look more like the Milky Way, porous, great spaces between, inside the atom empty space, the particles few and far between, like the planets in the solar system.

The Broad View.

The whole world is thrilled, transformed, by scientific contemplation. The realities of existence are much deeper seated than appears on the surface of things. Matter is no doubt one form of reality, but it looms far too big in our present apprehension, and to suppose that we ourselves, with our mind and will, designing, planning, loving, are limited to a material mode of manifestation, is not taking advantage of our intelligence, is not looking at the universe in a hopeful, a happy and a satisfactory way.

The universe is great and splendid beyond our imagination. Let us not take a pitiful, mean outlook. Lift up your hearts; it is meek and right so to do. "Greet the unseen with a cheer." Nothing is too great or too good to be true. Do not believe that we can imagine things better than they are.

In the long run, in the ultimate outlook, in the eye of the Creator, the possibilities of existence, the possibilities open to us, are beyond our imagination. It is a universe of boundless possibilities. Even here and now how beautiful it is—many of its aspects astonishingly beautiful; and the more you penetrate into the secrets of nature the more overwhelmed you are with wonder, love and praise.

Apply these things to human life, to your own individual life. Realize that this present existence on the planet is but an episode, a temporary adventure, to be followed by higher and further adventures. Do not fear. Fear is torment. "Perfect love casteth out fear." The universe is ruled by perfect love. That is my message.

A census of the orpnanages in the United States some time ago disclosed the fact that only 10 per cent. of the children in them were orphans.

BERLIN RADIOS SOUND PICTURES

Broadcasts "Acoustic Film" Drama for the Ear as the Movie Represents It to the Eye—Shipwreck Made Audible

BERLIN.

BERLIN'S radio broadcasting station recently endeavored to convey "sound pictures" and succeeded to such an extent that a new species of film may be said to have been called into being. The Funkstunde of Berlin calls this "the acoustic film."

The usual broadcasting of a spoken drama by means of the radio has merely striven to call forth an optical illusion of the actual theatre. But here a new form, a new medium has been found which is in consonance, literally in consonance, with the possibilities of the radio and true to its own means and limitations. In fact the new form is adapted so closely to the nature of the radio that the same effects could not possibly be achieved, either on the boards, or in a revue, or on the kinematographic screen.

Precisely as the movie appeals to the imagination and stirs it solely by means of the eye, so the acoustic film makes its direct and immediate appeal direct to the ear. Let us, for example, consider how the acoustic film suggests a change of place in the action. We need, in this case, simply imagine that a telephone conversation is being represented; one is a witness, an aural witness of the speech and counter-speech of both speakers, each of whom is in a different place. The action, too, may easily be transferred from one place to another.

Horse Race "Heard."

The particular mission of the acoustic film, as made clear by this experiment in Berlin, lies in the direction of establishing permanent relations between the various scenes of action, even though these be far removed from each other. Here, in a sense, Einstein's law of relativity comes into play. The experiment at Berlin is of particular significance in that it is based upon a recognition of this fact, and not only because it has brought something new, but because for the first time it has produced a new function, a new meaning, a new language and form of expression for the radio. In other words it has evolved something out of its own nature and essence, and freed itself. This experiment denotes a new point of departure in the evolution of the radio, and very likely the inception of a new art.

The acoustic film tried out in Berlin bore the title "Der Tönende Stein" or "The Resounding Stone," and it was brought upon the wires by Alfred Braun. The text was well prepared; the tempo struck was a lively one. The mass or mob scenes made themselves felt in force, and resonance, especially at the horse race that was "heard," then again in the bar-room, on the ship and on the magic island.

Wide Range of Sounds.

There were many original innovations, and a remarkable range of sounds, as in the race between the two steamers, in the departure of the train from the railroad station, and then during the discharge of the rocket aimed at the moon. Occasionally, as during the second "act" or sound-picture, the noise or voice of this or that piece of machinery, itself an actor in the drama of sounds, drowned the voices of the human speakers. During the shipwreck the voices of the passengers and those of the elements formed an indistinguishable blur, but these are flaws that can be easily avoided or remedied. The tenth acoustic film will show an advance upon the first.

The birth of the acoustic film, or the drama of transmitted and experienced sound, opens untold possibilities. New discoveries will begin to accrue about it. Its evolution may be as rapid as that of the visual, optical film, for the field it commands is more universal than that of the film that is fettered to the screen. The idea is vital and fruitful, even though the execution be still imperfect.

SHOES AND CARS

ONE of the latest accusations against the automobile comes from the shoe trade. Makers of shoes say that the proportional decline in the shoe business since the war is due largely to the increased use of the automobile. Especially noticeable is this decline in the rural districts, where the people formerly walked short distances rather than hitch up the team. Now a car ready at the door takes them to the village or the city. Then, too, the farmer often walked beside his horses when big loads were hauled. The man or woman who did not have "work" shoes and also "Sunday" shoes was scarce. Now the farmer finds that one pair at a time does him quite well.

NOW THERE IS another New Paige —the BROUGHAM at the amazing price of $1295

Following fast on the heels of the first announcement of the startling new line of Paige motor cars—comes the Brougham, at the amazing low price of only $1295.

Somewhat more compact—a trifle shorter in wheelbase two doors instead of four—these are the only essential differences between this new Brougham and the other superb models in the new Paige line.

The engine is the same. There is only one Paige engine—Paige built—an ultra-modern, highly perfected and wonderfully simplified motor developing all of the power any emergency will ever require and all of the speed any sane driver will ever care to use.

The body of the Brougham explains at a glance the tremendous strides recently made in the body builder's art. Although somewhat smaller than the Paige sedans—it is larger than most sedans. Its interior is roomier than most. Passengers may enter or leave the rear without requiring front seats to be folded down. The finish is of polished lacquer in two tones of rich gray. The upholstery is soft, lustrous, and long wearing. The exterior appearance is enhanced by a smart double belt molding, and the popular "ball back" rear roof line.

You who have driven the companion cars of this new Brougham will find here all of the same quick acceleration—all of that same delightful ease of handling—the same positive, safe and certain braking—the same roadability and comfort. You will find in this Brougham, too, all of the quality in both materials and workmanship that always distinguishes motor cars bearing the name of Paige. And you will find all these things in a car that sells for less than a great many only ordinary cars.

See this Brougham and drive it at your very earliest opportunity—for we doubt if even the tremendous new Paige factories will be able to build enough for all those who will want this truly outstanding "buy."

I Will Decide For Myself

When I am aggravated with my old automobile . . . and wonder how I ever came to buy this iron horse . . . I recall that I let others decide this important matter for me . . . I relied on the judgment of friends . . . and finally let a clever salesman slip one over on me.

Not the first time, either . . . happens about once a year, to me.

A car is such a personal thing, too . . . why, one lives in it more than he does in his home . . . every person should own a car which will answer to his own moods . . . his needs . . . and his peculiar kind of driving.

Had my heart set on a Rickenbacker last year . . . never have been able to get it out of my system.

Every time a Rickenbacker passes me on the open road . . . or jumps away from me at a traffic signal . . . I cuss myself for my weak-mindedness . . . and resolve that next time I buy a car . . . I shall decide for myself.

There is only one way to do that deciding . . . drive the car with my own hands.

I am going to drive a Rickenbacker . . . nobody is going to sell me any car until I do.

Friendly advice is all right . . . sincere for the most part . . . I know my friends mean well when they tell me they are sure the cars they drive are "just as good" as a Rickenbacker . . .

But their tastes are not my tastes . . . I want a car that is made to measure for me . . . and that Rickenbacker they tell me is Custom-Built, so to speak, for car-connoisseurs . . . That means me.

I've owned a lot of cars . . . have bought my experience . . . and even if I don't know all there is to know about automobiles . . . I sure do know what I want.

Those "advanced engineering features" . . . which, I am told, are to be found only in a Rickenbacker . . . intrigue me . . . I admit I'd like to own a car that has every last one of them!

Tandem Fly Wheels . . . Dilutioniser . . . Double Depth Frame . . . Cradle Springs . . . Air Cleaner . . . Mechanical Four-wheel Brakes . . . Custom Built Body . . . every one of these . . . and all the others.

I confess I don't know just what all of them are . . . Last year I was persuaded that some were only useless "talking points" . . . put in to make Rickenbackers sell easier.

But at this year's shows I noticed that those very makers who then flouted the idea, have since copied those features . . . must have been right . . . must have been better.

I am going to know about all these things . . . I have an ordinarily intelligent mind . . . an average amount of mechanical acumen . . . and, even if I don't quite understand when a salesman tries to tell me . . . I sure can when I see for myself.

And that is just what I am resolved to do . . . see with my own eyes . . . decide for myself.

Then I am going to take a Rickenbacker car and drive it with my own hands . . . going to take Rickenbacker's word for it that the car is its own best salesman . . . let the eloquence of that super-performance . . . about which I hear so much . . . tell its own story.

Don't want any salesman or expert driver along . . . going to do my own driving . . . uninterrupted by any sales talk.

Going to decide for myself . . . this time.

And if I don't buy a Rickenbacker . . . I will have no one but myself and Rickenbacker to blame . . . I have a hunch I will own a Rickenbacker by tomorrow night.

Let's see . . . Garland Automobile Company is Rickenbacker distributor here . . . 1777 Broadway, at 57th Street . . . phone is Columbus 5596.

OUR CONSTITUTION IS STUDIED IN GERMANY

Chief Justice Simons Concludes That the Endurance of the German Republic Depends on Adopting American Theory of the Supreme Court

A CONTROVERSY has developed in Germany as to the nature of a constitution. As in the early history of the United States the contest is between those who regard the constitution as little more than a code of law and, as such, amendable by the Legislature, and those who regard the constitution as a higher obligation and only amendable by a preponderating vote of the people. In the midst of the German dispute a German translation of James M. Beck's "Constitution of the United States," has been published in Berlin by Walter Gruyten & Co., with an introduction by Dr. Walter Simons, Chief Justice of Germany, which appears below.

By DR. WALTER SIMONS,
Chief Justice of Germany.

LEIPSIC.

THE history of the origin and fundamental philosophy of the Constitution of the United States, by James M. Beck, former Solicitor General of the United States, is based on a series of lectures which he first gave to English jurists in Gray's Inn and then to French jurists in the Sorbonne. His lectures were published in a book, of which there have been several editions in the United States. His present book is also of the greatest importance to German readers and not alone to those of the legal profession.

The great difficulties which preceded the origin of this marvelous work of human ingenuity and statecraft are most graphically described. The Constitution, which now for approximately 140 years has shaped the political destiny of one of the most extraordinary and important nations in the history of the world, was not acclaimed by its mental originators to the extent one would have expected, considering its importance at the present time. The Constitution was the result of compromises that did not satisfy any of the conflicting parties.

But the strong will of the American people to conserve its political unity, for which it had fought so hard, and the wise barriers which were put into the Constitution by its founders to prevent too rapid or facile changes, have had this extraordinary result, namely, that provisions of an organizing nature meant for a number of small communities of an entirely Colonial character, bent on safeguarding their individual liberty, have proved sufficient for a nation grown large in population and covering half a hemisphere; a nation which has brought to highest development its industrial and commercial resources and, furthermore, now constitutes a world power of the first magnitude.

Opposed European Ideas.

The American Constitution was formed in conscious opposition to the basic laws of European nations as they then existed. In Europe the absolute power of the territorial princes had established itself as superseding the medieval and feudal caste régime. The free and brave Colonists who in the struggle against England had achieved their political independence, protested against feudalism, caste régime and absolutism. French emancipatory ideas came to the fore at the Convention of Philadelphia again and again. Rousseau's "Contrat Social" has never found a more splendid realization than in the Constitution of these British colonists and Montesquieu's "division of powers" has never been put more consciously into practical effect.

But the spirit which dominated in America the realization of these French ideas was very different to the one which appeared later in the French Revolution. It was not the Roman spirit of logical radicalism, but the Anglo-Saxon spirit of soberly taking into account what could be practically achieved—the spirt of compromise. Whoever has read Mr. Beck's book will be in a position to say of this contrast: The spirit of Washington and Franklin achieved victory over that of Jefferson and Hamilton.

The origin of the various struggles for the Constitution lay in the strong desire for individual liberty in the hearts of the inhabitants of New England. They were just as convinced of the inviolability of their individual human rights as the representatives of the Third Estate were in the French National Assembly. But notwithstanding this they did not include an enumeration of their individual human rights in the final draft of their Constitution. They merely saw to it that, as far as possible, different barriers to the power of the State were laid down in the Constitution.

The great political and economic dangers which threatened the then young community of States in the '70s and '80s of the eighteenth century forced the fathers of the Constitution to found a powerful and independent Executive, in order to hold together the then loosely federated and jealously governed Colonies. These differences almost brought to naught the work of the convention at the last moment, when, after having been accepted by the Convention of Philadelphia, the Constitution was laid before the various States of the confederation for ratification.

On the one hand was the justified pride of the individual State, which had developed its individuality through long independent existence as a separate colony and was conscious of the part it had played in the wars of independence; such a State did not want to renounce its claim to have and to keep equal rights with every other State. On the other hand was the wish of the larger and mightier States to have their natural superiority also recognized by the Articles of the Constitution.

If this natural superiority were left out of consideration, the tie binding large and small States together would very soon have been severed, for in the long run the large States would never have submitted to being overruled by a majority of smaller States. But if the participating influence in the rights endowed by the Constitution to the large and the small States were distributed merely in proportion to the extent of their power, the small States would soon have considered themselves as overpowered and would have lost the common interest in the Constitution.

This twofold danger was, however, averted by the American people in their Constitution through the ingenious association of the principle of equality, such as is shown by the equal representation in the Senate, and the principle of proportionate power, as shown by the unequal representation in the House of Representatives.

How League of Nations Differs.

This example is of the utmost importance for the world. A community of the large and small nations of the world based on international law is not feasible unless this expedient of the United States of America is followed in the community of nations. The combination of the two contradictory principles, such as is tried in the League of Nations, does not equal, as far as equity and practical applicability are concerned, the Constitution of the American Union.

For whereas in the Constitution of the Union the Senate demonstrates the equality and the House of Representatives the inequality of the various States, just the opposite is the case in the League of Nations. The Senate, namely, the Council of the League of Nations, incorporates the overwhelming power of the great powers, whereas the House of Representatives, the Assembly of the League of Nations, stands for the equality of the nations. In view of the supreme importance of the Council of the League of Nations the constitution of this body demonstrates a unilateral and oligarchial character, which already is beginning to get on the nerves of those nations not represented in the Council.

It is of particular interest to the European reader to note in Mr. Beck's book the mode and methods by which the Constitution of the United States is understood to put certain barriers on the Executive, as well as on the legislative power of the Union. As far as domestic policy is concerned, it is quite natural that the Executive power should be limited by the will of the legislator. But, on the other hand, the method by which, in the foreign relations of the nation, the President can be restrained by the Senate is typical of the American Constitution.

Supreme Court a Balance Wheel.

The history of the World War has shown that the methods providing for this check do not always suffice. But how strongly the Senate influences the Government of the United States, as regards its negotiations with foreign powers, every country has learned to realise that has concluded treaties with the United States and has seen agreements already reached being jeopardized by subsequent misgivings on the part of the Senate.

The nucleus of Mr. Beck's book is taken up with his description of the Federal Judiciary. This jurisdiction he describes as the "balance wheel" in the machinery of the Constitution and, in reality, the fact that the Constitution has remained the unshakable foundation of the political existence of the United States during their long and changeable history seems to be due to the function of the Supreme Court. Such a part it would not have been possible for a judicial body to play if the Supreme Court had not been placed on a fully equal basis with the legislator and the Executive; on an equal, but not superior basis.

Growth Had Little Effect.

For even the Supreme Court is not entitled to declare a law null and void, or to prescribe to the Executive; the Supreme Court is merely in a position in each individual case to deny to a measure or law, which it considers contrary to the Constitution, its effectiveness and practical applicability. This, however, suffices to destroy the very foundation of all laws that are contrary to the Constitution and so make them practically inapplicable.

Another important point in Mr. Beck's book is the question of the possibility of changing the Constitution. Here, too, the Supreme Court is the decisive factor. The Constitution of the United States has been changed only twice since the Bill of Rights was added to it in 1791. The Constitution has proved sufficiently elastic to meet the requirements of the times, which have developed within the last decades. A prophecy was made long ago that the American Constitution would only suffice for the life of the nation as long as in its immense territory there still remained unpopulated areas suitable for colonization, because only thus long would the conditions last under which the Constitution was made.

Herein lies certainly some truth. When the pressure brought to bear by the members of a human community upon each other cannot be alleviated by the withdrawal of part of its members to unpopulated areas, conditions in the United States will more and more resemble those of overpopulated Europe. But it seems to me that, from the point of view of constitutional law, there is so far little effect to be noticed by the change in the colonization conditions of the United States.

Another phase of modern development seems to me of much more vital importance, and that is the congestion of the population in the industrial and commercial centres of the large cities and the development of mass production, which standardizes not only the product, but also the producer. This revolution in economic conditions has necessarily led to an entirely different social stratification than the one which confronted the authors of the Constitution.

Balance Wheel Necessary.

The Thirteen Colonies were at the time of the War of Independence a mixture of agrarian and early capitalistic formations. The era of early capitalism played a decisive part on the formation of their political status. This explains why the Supreme Court has frequently adjudged legal measures unenforceable as contrary to the Constitution when these measures have aimed at harmonizing existing laws with the social requirements of modern times, which tend to curtail the development of capitalism.

Consequently, conflict arose between the Supreme Court and the elements of the social evolution which has taken place in the United States. The Supreme Court is reproached with being somewhat reactionary and unsocial, and there is a growing movement in the United States to do away with or to curtail the right of control on the part of the Supreme Court over the legislative bodies.

I think that it would be deeply deplorable in the interests of the healthy progress of the United States if this movement were crowned with success. If you take the balance wheel out of the machine the running of the machine will soon become irregular and its inner mechanism will gradually go to pieces. If this social movement, which is not a victorious one in the entire world, is successful in the United States, the resistance on the part of the Supreme Court could be broken by a change of the Constitution—a change for which the Fathers of the Constitution have already provided.

Changes Difficult.

But the road thereto is more difficult and unapproachable than the one provided by the Constitution of Weimar. However, it will not be difficult for a largely preponderant movement of the people to take that road. It seems to me a proof of the deep, statesmanlike, political wisdom of the Convention of Philadelphia that while they laid the way open for a step of this kind they made it hard to take, for thus they avoided delivering the Constitution of the United States to the ever-changing majorities of public opinion and of its Representatives in Congress.

James M. Beck is a friend of Great Britain and of France and has clearly expressed this in his introductory remarks to the English and French editions of his book. He is no friend of Germany. As representative of the idea of right, he deeply felt the violation of the neutrality of Belgium by Germany. At the beginning of the World War, a friend of mine sent me from Philadelphia an article which Mr. Beck had published concerning this violation of neutrality, in The Philadelphia Public Ledger, under the title "Belgium Versus Germany," in which he discussed this conflict in international law in the form of a legal proceeding.

What German Constitution Needs.

His verdict was against Germany. Notwithstanding this, I think that Mr. Beck, by authorizing the German translation of his book, has done the German people a real act of friendship, for in his book he shows us, as in a mirror, the political tasks confronting us and our own republican problems. Germany and the Weimar Constitution can learn many an important lesson from Mr. Beck's book.

I, as the head of the Supreme Court of Germany, have, by reading Mr. Beck's book, come to the conclusion, in the first place, that our republic cannot continue to exist if the power of the judiciary, as compared with the legislative and executive powers, is not given a stronger position and greater jurisdiction than heretofore. The foundations in this respect have been laid by the Constitution of Weimar; they need only be developed. But the fact that our Parliament, year after year, enacts laws which change the economic conditions of the necessity of such a change. In the last mind, after all, it is the people, who are living under a Constitution, and not the Articles of the Constitution.

How a Constitution can be adjusted to the necessities of time, without formally changing the Constitution, can be seen from the difference between the clause of the American Constitution with regard to the election of the President and the practical application of this clause. The mode of election was originally intended as a complicated indirect election within the various States, but therefrom developed the decision as to the selection of candidates by the great national parties, a decision with which the voters have to conform.

If the German people in the difficult years to come, prove themselves capable of a similar capacity of adaptation and a similar tenacity in retaining their conditions of life, as shown by the American people in similarly difficult conditions, Germany can be saved from its present political, economic and social condition of danger.

CANADA IS LED TO REPENT ACTION IN BARRING TITLES

Dominion Learns That Distinctions Are an Asset in World Trade

London.

EIGHT years ago Canada, after lively discussion, abolished titles.

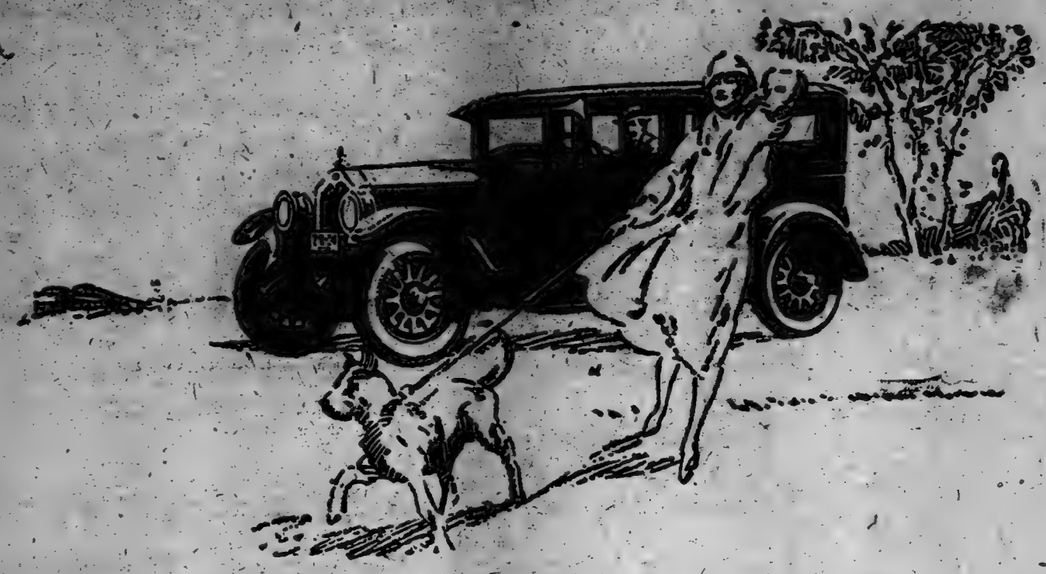
She was the only Dominion in the empire to take this revolutionary step. Now it develops that Canadians do not like to find titled members of the Australian and South African Dominions taking precedence over their representatives at official and court functions in London. Etiquette, however, demands that these orders of precedence shall be carefully observed. Canada consequently is beginning to feel that the abolition was a hasty step.

The Canadian decision was made in 1918, as the war came to a close. Canadians apprehensively looked forward to the usual scramble for titular distinctions as a reward of war service. To avoid hard feelings, on the motion of a Conservative member, supported by Sir Wilfred Laurier, the leader of the Opposition, the Dominion Parliament decided to abolish titles, and informed London that such honors were not to be conferred on Canadian citizens.

So definite was the prevailing sentiment on the subject that it was even asked whether Canadians who, like Lord Beaverbrook, had during the war been raised to titular eminence, should not be asked to relinquish these honors. But the movement was quashed because too many Canadians had earned these distinctions by conspicuous service. It was felt that abolition of these titles would reflect on the Dominion honor.

Renewed interest in the question is due to the remarks of J. S. McKinnon, former President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, who managed the Canadian Exhibit at the recent Wembly Empire Exposition. Commenting on the commercial and industrial advantages likely to accrue to Canada from empire trade through taking part in the exposition, Mr. McKinnon remarked that "Canada is seriously handicapped in Great Britain by the lack of titled Canadians." He took no notice of the fact that Lord Beaverbrook, perhaps the most prominent titled Canadian in London, is proud of his humble New Brunswick ancestry, and is a power in the London newspaper world.

McKinnon's plea for the revival of distinctions is purely practical. He asserts that Canadians forget big business is largely carried on in the empire through London, where social channels provide the necessary contacts. And London is strict when it comes to the question of precedence.



BUICK shares its price with many motor cars
—but its Value with none

Because of the great number of Buicks bought each year, and because every dollar of the savings of great volume goes back into Buick value, Buick's moderate price buys quality.

Buick can, and does build its cars the way all motor car engineers would like to build theirs, if their volume or selling price permitted.

Buick is selling more cars today than ever before in Buick history. The public wants finer transportation at lower cost.

And in Buick they get it.

Buick is making a runaway race of the 1926 automobile business, distancing all competitors.

Records are not new to Buick, for Buick has held first place at every National Automobile Show for eight consecutive years.

MOBILIZING AGAINST CRIME

By WINTHROP D. LANE.

THE criminal is being investigated on a scale never known before. It is a slow locality in the United States that is not carrying on a study into one aspect or another of the criminal or of methods of dealing with him: State investigations, city investigations, inquiries sponsored by private organizations, studies by university faculties, and even an examination by the Federal Government. A National Crime Commission is also promoting an inquiry of nation-wide scope.

The criminal is being pursued into nearly every phase of his life and conduct. How much crime is there? What are the causes of crime, and of an increase in crime? Is there a devil-may-care attitude in the younger generation that is producing an increase in crime? Does prohibition promote crime? How do the Courts, the law, the prosecutor and the whole machinery of justice handle the criminal? What are the social, educational and industrial conditions that affect crime and supply fertile soil for it? What happens to criminals when they are sentenced or placed on probation? These are some of the questions that the investigators are out to answer.

In some degree these investigations have been prompted by the indignation of business men, who believe that nothing is being done to check crime and propose to do something themselves, and in some degree they represent the aroused interest of other people. But the purpose underlying most of them is to turn up facts. A growing seriousness of purpose characterizes them, and an increasing understanding of the difficulties involved in reducing and dealing with crime. The mere fact that the criminal is being studied instead of merely punished sets off the present method of dealing with crime from that of all previous ages.

Many Former Crime Waves.

To what extent there is a real crime wave now, or to what extent the existing crime wave is larger than crime waves of the past, is a debated question. Indeed, it is one of the questions on which these investigations may be expected to throw light. There have been many "crime waves" in years gone by. George W. Kirchwey, former warden of Sing Sing and Professor of Criminology at the New York School of Social Work, has recently mentioned some of these.

There was a "crime wave" in this country in the years immediately following the Civil War. A decade later the New York Society for the Prevention of Crime was organized to repel another crime wave. "When I went on the bench thirty years ago," said Charles F. Amidon, a United States Judge in North Dakota, recently, "there was the same agitation about the shocking conditions of crime in the United States that there is today." Dr. Julius Goebel Jr., of the University of Illinois, reported fifteen years ago in the American Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology that there was "a wave of crime passing over the country so important and alarming that it demands the attention of every true patriot." Dean Edith Abbot, of the University of Chicago, insists that in the twenty-two years of her residence in that city "there has not been a single year without its crime wave."

Robberies in the City.

So, we see that if there is a crime wave, it is certainly a recurrent one. Possibly there is an increase in particular kinds of crime. Possibly there is a crime wave in New York city that does not touch other cities. Readers of newspapers are certainly justified in concluding that robbery is incessant in New York city today. The pistol-carrying bandit, stealing his loot and leaping into his purring automobile, waiting for him at the curb, is a familiar picture in the mind of the metropolitan reader. He is a glamorous figure, and there is a logical plausibility in the idea that, thieving has left lonely country roads for the crowded streets of the big city.

The present wave of investigations started with the establishment of the Chicago Crime Commission, organized in 1919 by the Chicago Association of Commerce. Here we see the embattled business man making a stand against the great amount of crime on every side of him and determined to have it checked. This was followed by the thorough survey of criminal justice in Cleveland, sponsored by the Cleveland Foundation and directed by Dean Roscoe Pound and Professor Felix Frankfurter of the Harvard Law School. The Cleveland Association for Criminal Justice, founded in 1921, was a result of this study.

Baltimore Follows Suit.

Stimulated by these examples, public-spirited citizens of Baltimore organized the Baltimore Criminal Justice Commission in 1923, and this was followed by similar action in Los Angeles and Kansas City. The purpose of these bodies is to carry on continuous inquiries into the handling of crime, and to support public officials when they vigorously carry out their duties in criminal affairs. In 1924 the Missouri Association for Criminal Justice was organized. This is a statewide body, and former Governor Herbert S. Hadley of that State is at the head of it. This association is just completing a monumental study of the criminal process in Missouri, and publication is expected shortly.

Meanwhile, the American Bar Association was taking a great interest in crime, and an offshoot of that body, the American Law Institute, is today making an expert study of criminal

Wave of Lawlessness Stirs Unprecedented Investigations by Experts

York State established the New York State Joint Legislative Committee on the Co-ordination of Civil and Criminal Practice Acts. The recommendations of this committee, embodied in twenty-two bills, are now before the Legislature. At a recent hearing some of the bills were praised, others criticized. The purpose of the measures, on the whole, is to facilitate the progress of criminal trials and to withdraw from defendants some of the means by which they can obstruct justice.

Not long ago came announcement of Governor Smith's plan to promote the establishment of a New York State Crime Commission. Such a commission, it was announced, would inquire into the causes and remedies for the present abnormal crime conditions; it would study the shortcomings of the criminal code, the treatment of lawbreakers in prisons, and the parole and probation systems. The bill to establish this commission is now in committee in both houses of the Legislature. It appropriates $50,000 for the purposes of the commission, which is to be composed of two Senators, two Assemblymen and five persons appointed from private life by Governor Smith.

In January of this year twenty-seven civic and business organizations of Chicago joined in a program of anti-crime activities and of cooperation with officials who are trying to reduce crime. The presidents of these organizations met at the University Club in that city. It was said that they would promote a study of the civil as well as the criminal side of the administration of justice. Their program, it was announced, called for the expenditure of $500,000 a year "to lower the $60,000,000 annual crime bill," though why $60,000,000 was chosen as the amount of the annual crime bill is not clear. Apparently these organizations think that the Chicago Crime Commission is not doing all that can be done.

Harvard Enters the Field.

Harvard University has recently entered the field as an investigator of crime. With Dean Pound and Prof. Frankfurter on its staff, it has two men who have already had wide experience in a comprehensive study of the criminal situation—the Cleveland Survey of Criminal Justice, moreover, has been supplied by the Milton Fund—established two years ago to encourage research—to enable a scientific and statistical investigation to be made of the operation of criminal justice in Boston. As usual, in grants from the Milton Fund, the money was made available for a particular member of the Faculty, and Joseph H. Beale, Royall Professor of Law, and his associates, received the grant in this instance. "A practical breakdown of the machinery of criminal justice in the United States is admitted by many competent authorities," wrote the Fund Committee in announcing the award, "and Boston is selected as a typical region for this study."

The Boston Chamber of Commerce has called for an inquiry in Massachusetts similar to that outlined by Governor Smith in proposing the New York State Crime Commission here.

It is understood that the United States Government is making a little criminal survey of its own. At the direction of President Coolidge, it is said, Secretary of Labor Davis is looking into the criminal situation as affected by aliens. Many persons believe that large alien populations in some of our cities contribute considerably to the amount of crime and to the protection and concealment afforded criminals. It is understood to be Secretary Davis's purpose to learn what he can about this situation.

The inquiry was prompted in a novel way. It is said that a man was trying to avoid jury duty in a Chicago court, the criminal branch of the Illinois Supreme Court. The Judge, William V. Brothers, was not entirely satisfied with the reasons the man was giving, and was displeased also at the efforts made by a number of others to escape duty on the jury in that same case.

Pressing the man to be frank, he said. "Now tell us why you really don't want to serve." The man shifted in his seat and replied: "Well, it isn't healthy to bring in a verdict of guilty, and I dont want to have to apply for a pistol and carry it around to protect my wife and children." It is believed that he was afraid of some of the aliens residing in Chicago.

The National Crime Commission.

The National Crime Commission, which was organized last Summer illustrates the growing seriousness of purpose of some of these bodies. It is the most ambitious and comprehensive of all. Some of the agencies hastily formed to investigate crime have known exactly what they wanted to do. The members of them have felt a genuine but vague indignation at the ineffectiveness of the methods of meeting the crime situation, but they have had no well-thought-out plan for improving things.

When the National Crime Commission was first started, it was pictured as "an organization of business men to combat organized crime," and as an agency "to conduct an anti-crime crusade throughout the country." The first meeting held to organize the commission was called at the offices of Elbert H. Gary, Chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, at 71 Broadway, late in July. Governor Smith, representatives of the judiciary, the State Senate, the Police Department and business associations were there. Among those interested at the start were Franklin D. Roosevelt, former assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mark O. Prentiss, and F. Trubee Davison, Assemblyman from Nassau County, Long Island.

Early in the effort Judge Gary was asked to be head of the Commission, but declined. Mr. Davison was then chosen. Richard Washburn Child, former United States Ambassador to Italy, who had toured the country in a study of crime and brought his findings out in a book, "Battling the Criminal," was asked to tell the Commission what he thought. Members of the Allied Business Men's Protective Association endorsed the purpose of the Commission.

By November such progress had been made, and the members of the Executive Committee were announced. The list included people prominent in social, business, professional, political and academic circles. Among the members are Dr. E. A. Alderman, President of the University of Virginia; Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War; Herbert S. Hadley, Chancellor of Washington University; Richard Washburn Child, Mrs. Ethel Roosevelt Derby, Hugh Frayne, representing the American Federation of Labor; Franklin D. Roosevelt, General James A. Drain, former Commander of the American Legion, and Chester A. Rowell of California. Charles H. Sabin is Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Few Crime Figures Available.

Mr. Davison, as Chairman of the commission, showed the progress that had been made in its plans by saying: "It is impossible for us to decide how to handle the crime situation until we know how much crime there really is. At present there are no complete crime statistics kept anywhere in the United States, except in the City of Cleveland and the State of Missouri.

"Some of the things we want to find out are not only how many robberies there are and how many offenders are caught but how many were let out on bail and how many jumped bail bond. The bail bond story is a big story in itself. Then we want to know all we can about the criminals—who they are, whether they are young or old, first offenders or habitual criminals, and whether they come from criminal families. There is a tremendous story in their history. There is another big story in the parole, pardon and probation system."

One of the purposes of the commission is to assist in the establishment of local crime commissions, which can concentrate critical observation on the law-enforcing agencies of their respective communities. It expects to disseminate widely information regarding crime and to stimulate public opinion in support of policies favored by it.

The findings of these bodies will soon be appearing, and the criminal is likely to discover as the years pass by that many methods familiar to him are being abandoned or changed. Progress comes slowly, especially in legal affairs and matters involving popular habits of thought, and it would not be safe to expect too rapid change. But a desire for facts about the handling of crime seems to be strong among more people than ever before, and that is the beginning of reform.

MEDALS FOR LONG HIKES

Award of "A La Sainte Terre" Awaits All Who Have Done a Thousand Miles in a Year and Twenty-Six in a Day

THE walkers "a la Sainte Terre" may now turn their footsteps homeward and claim their reward. The mark of their fellowship is a bronze medal bearing the figure of a hiker, staff in hand and knapsack on back, above the inscription "A la Sainte Terre," freely translated by the medal's originator, "To our better selves."

In an article in the Magazine Section of THE NEW YORK TIMES of April 12, 1925, Dr. John H. Finley flung out his challenge to the urban dweller to answer the highroad's call, to make his daily journeyings on foot for his health's sake, and for his spirit's sake to translate his pacing of city pavements into imaginary pilgrimages in scenic lands. To those who within a year should complete 1,000 miles of walking, an average of about three miles a day, including a single day's hike of twenty-six miles, Dr. Finley promised the bronze medal award. The year comes to an end today.

Dr. Finley himself is one of America's most inveterate walkers. On the night of April 1 he completed his twenty-one hundredth mile since his offer was made; and several twenty-six-mile days appear on his calendar. At the top of each page in his engagement book Dr. Finley sets down in the morning the number of miles, usually computed from city blocks, that he has walked the day before. He makes a point every year of walking around Manhattan Island, for the sake of exercise, the sense of achievement the expedition affords and to freshen his picture of New York's variegated life.

He thinks nothing of a hike to Princeton from St. George, Staten Island, via the Tottenville Ferry to Perth Amboy, and so on, a distance of some forty miles, which he makes in something more than ten hours, often by night. Among his past records are a forty-mile walk in France, immediately before Europe was plunged into war; a sixty-mile walk, in one day and night, across the Holy Land, and a seventy-mile walk across the State of New Hampshire.

Wide Response to Challenge.

No sooner had Dr. Finley brought his challenge to the attention of the readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES than he began to receive letters from all parts of the country. Some of the writers were already veteran walkers, others were persons who had been inspired by Dr. Finley's challenge to take up walking. Some of the writers were men and women who had been walking for years, but had never thought of keeping a record of their walks. Others were persons who had been walking for years, but had never thought of keeping a record of their walks. Others were persons who had been walking for years, but had never thought of keeping a record of their walks. Others were persons

LONGFELLOW POEM SAVES OLD HOUSE

Scene of "Old Clock on the Stairs" Preserved When 1,000 Citizens Cite Sentimental Value of Pittsfield Dwelling

THE City Council of Pittsfield, Mass., recently refused to adopt a recommendation of the high school commission that the historic Longfellow house, at 156 East Street, be used as part of a site for a new high school, and the property has thus been saved from destruction. The house once known as Elm Knoll, standing near the centre of Pittsfield, was built in 1700, and there the poet wrote "The Old Clock on the Stairs" in 1845.

Longfellow's association with the house began with his honeymoon in 1843. He spent much time there in Summer until 1853, when the house was sold by Mrs. Longfellow's father, Nathan Appleton of Boston, to Thomas F. Plunkett, a leading resident of Pittsfield. His daughter, Miss Harriet E. Plunkett, has lived in the house more than seventy years, and a part owner of the place, her nephew, Thomas F. Plunkett, also is an occupant with his wife and children. Mr. Plunkett's twin sons, Thomas F. and William R. Plunkett, sleep in the chamber that Longfellow occupied. A large old-fashioned chair in the room was a favorite with the poet. Other furniture in Miss Plunkett's possession include four Duncan Phyfe chairs.

Out in the garden is the picturesque vine-covered arbor where the poet spent many hours. The clock that Longfellow immortalized was reserved by his father-in-law, Mr. Appleton, and was kept in the house for sixteen years after it was sold. It was then taken to Boston by Thomas Appleton, and it is now one of the relics at Craigie house, the Cambridge home of the poet's daughter, Miss Alice Longfellow. The grandfather clock on the stairway in the Pittsfield house was bought by the late Mrs. Thomas F. Plunkett. It is similar in design to the one admired by Longfellow.

Longfellow's Romance.

Thomas Gold, a Pittsfield lawyer, built the house. His law office was in the ell; there his safe may still be seen. It was used for many years by the late Edward Boltwood, historian of Pittsfield. The front parlor wall paper is that which Gold imported from London. The paper was put on in blocks about eighteen inches square, and the pictures, rich with color, represent street and market scenes in Cairo, Egypt. Gold ordered the paper before the War of 1812; it did not arrive till 1815. This room is almost unchanged from Longfellow's day.

Mr. and Mrs. Gold were the parents of eleven children, the oldest of whom, Maria Theresa, was married in the homestead in 1806 to Nathan Appleton, a Boston textile manufacturer and merchant. Appleton's daughter, Frances Elizabeth, was touring with her father in Switzerland in 1837 when she first met Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. The romance which began in that year culminated in their marriage in July, 1843. The first two weeks of their honeymoon were spent at the poet's house in Cambridge; then they went on to Longfellow's ancestral home in Portland, Me.; after that they visited the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Thomas Gold, at the Pittsfield mansion, Elm Knoll. It was on this visit that the poet first made his acquaintance with the old clock standing on the broad landing of the stairs.

As It Was in Poet's Time.

In Longfellow's time Elm Knoll was a two-story square structure, surrounded by trees. The poet referred to it in his journal in 1846: "It is difficult to write in this house, so closely is it shut in by trees." In the first stanza of "The Old Clock," Longfellow wrote:

Somewhat back from the village street
Stands the old-fashioned Country Seat.
Across its antique portico
Tall poplar trees their shadows throw,
And from its station in the hall
An ancient timepiece says to all
"Forever—never Never—forever."

Longfellow wrote "The Student Prince" and several other poems besides "The Old Clock" at this Pittsfield mansion. When Mr. Plunkett bought the house he added a story with a balustraded roof.

The strange tale of Theodosia Herrick, a servant in the family of Thomas Gold, who owned the house up to 1827, is little known. Gold's funeral was elaborate, but the body was not viewed according to custom, "owing to the nature of the disease," it was said. The tale Theodosia told to friends at the time was that Gold from a second-story window had heard his own funeral sermon, had seen his own funeral procession. She said that the body in the coffin was one that had been brought from the Berkshire Medical College at night. She said that after midnight of the day of the funeral Tom Gold drove out of town and later sailed for Europe, where he lived for a number of years afterward.

Elm Knoll, now known as the Longfellow house, has been one of the literary shrines in the Berkshire Hills. Several hundred visitors every Summer call at the house to see the interior. Sometimes they walk right in. Last Summer a luncheon party that Miss Plunkett was giving was informally interrupted by sightseers.

When the School Commission first recommended taking the Longfellow and two adjoining properties for the high school, a group of women, headed by Mrs. Grace Campbell Van Norden of New York and Pittsfield, formed a working organization that obtained the names of 1,000 citizens who petitioned the town not to take the property. Other tracts, they contended, would serve as well. The Rev. Dr. Paul Revere Frothingham of Boston protested:

Historic Vandalism.

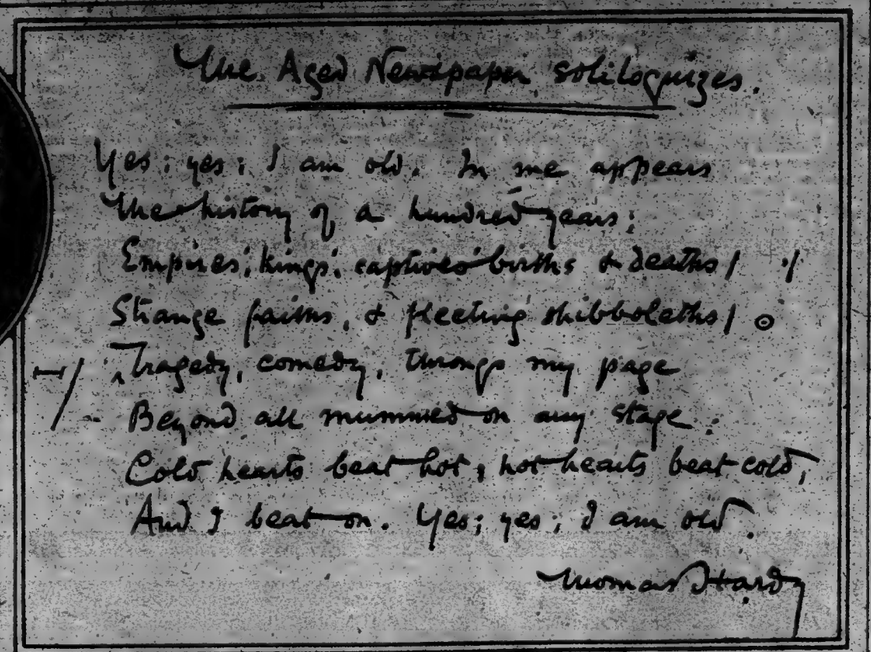
"We Americans seem to have a peculiar facility for robbing our towns and cities of their natural charms and places of historic interest. What would not the people of Boston give if they only had the Hancock house back again! But an injury of this kind done can never be remedied. What people fail to remember is that houses and buildings of historic character are valuable assets to a community. Tourists visit Pittsfield to see the house which Longfellow made famous by his 'Old Clock on the Stairs,' and there is destined to be a constant stream of such visitors unless the landmark is removed."

The High School Commission announced that in case the city had taken the house the stairway would have been salvaged and placed in the new school building.

THOMAS HARDY MAKES A NEWSPAPER SPEAK

THOMAS HARDY, the "grand old man of English letters," recently wrote a poem entitled "The Aged Newspaper Soliloquizes," which was published in The London Observer and THE NEW YORK TIMES on March 14.

So great was the interest aroused by the poem among American readers that Mr. Hardy was asked whether he would lend the manuscript to THE NEW YORK TIMES for reproduction. He responded by mailing it from his home in Dorchester.



The Aged Newspaper Soliloquizes.

Yes; yes; I am old. In me appears
The history of a hundred years:
Empires, kings, captives, births & deaths!
Strange faiths, & fleeting shibboleths!
Tragedy, comedy, thrones, my page
Beyond all mummed on any stage.
Cold hearts beat hot, hot hearts beat cold,
And I beat on. Yes; yes; I am old.

WOLVES RAID IN SEVERAL LANDS

Hard Winter Has Made Them Bold and Ready To Attack Human Beings — Have Even Gone After Automobiles and Wagons

DRIVEN by cold and hunger and the hard Winter, wolves have in recent weeks been ravaging a number of European districts. Desperate, ravening packs left their mountain haunts and invaded the valleys and even the suburbs of cities in Russia, the Balkans and Northern Italy. Over the Canada border in British Columbia the Chief Lake and March Lake regions were visited by hordes of black timber wolves. They wrought such havoc among the moose and other big game as to cause the trappers and hunters there to organize drives against them.

Russia was the greatest sufferer from the wolf raids. Russian Turkestan reported the destruction of 50,000 cows, horses and sheep during the season of 1925-26, despite the organization of special detachments of the Red Army and local hunters for war upon the pests. In Moscow an epidemic of rabies, which killed many persons, was attributed to a plague of infected dogs and wolves infesting the suburbs of the capital. To prevent the wolves from filling the whole picture a report from a remote point in the valley of the Lena River in Siberia told of five hunters being eaten by bears.

In Yugoslavia the wolves not only attacked cattle, but occupants of wagons and automobiles. In one instance they made a vain sally upon the passengers and crew of a railroad train stalled in snow. Inhabitants of the smaller villages were compelled to look carefully after the doors of their stables and houses at night. In Italy wolves from the mountains in the Province of Umbria approached the very gates of Perugia. From the mountains of Lorraine packs ventured as far as the eastern border of the Saare Valley in their search for food.

Some Wolves Reformed.

European writers point out that nearly every great war has been followed by wolf raids. The age-long warfare between man and beast is generally suspended during wars between nations, with a consequent increase in the animal population. In this case the wolves seem to have waited eight years—half a wolf's life. Perhaps a war-born generation grew up with reckless habits.

Following the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71, Alsace-Lorraine and the Swiss Jura Mountains were overrun by wolves. They did much damage and several years elapsed before the efforts of hunters succeeded in reducing the wolf plague to normal proportions. After the Thirty Years' War, the Seven Years' War and the retreat of Napoleon's troops from Moscow, many parts of Germany were ravaged by wolves as never before since ancient days. During the World War the wolf played a gruesome part after some of the battles.

Amazing Endurance that proves Incomparable Quality

L. B. Miller, manager of the Pacific Coast Division of the Victor X-Ray Corporation of Chicago, drove his Wills Sainte Claire Six Roadster from San Francisco to Portland, Ore. and return in 40 hours and 53 minutes, breaking the best previous record by 7 hours and 7 minutes—13 hours faster than the trip is made by the Shasta Limited, the crack train of the Southern Pacific.

Mr. Miller's car was the identical Gray Goose without any alterations, with which he startled the nation last July by crossing the continent from New York to San Francisco in 102 hours and 45 minutes total elapsed time, breaking the world's record by 7 hours and 44 minutes.

Thus again, the essential differences of Wills Sainte Claire performance, particularly stamina and endurance, were demonstrated in a spectacular fashion.

The run started from the Ferry Building in San Francisco and was completed at the same point, Western Union checking the car out and in. The total distance was 1489 miles of continuous driving over the circuitous roads through the mountains and the time of 40 hours, 53 minutes was from the time Miller left the Ferry Building until his return to San Francisco.

Many cars can show fine bursts of speed—55, 60 and even 70 miles an hour for a short spurt is a commonplace, but cross-country records, such as this Wills Sainte Claire Roadster has made, demand sustained speed to an extraordinary degree.

Sustained high speed, hour after hour, without let-up, is a terrific test of endurance—a cruel and relentless strain on every part of the mechanism, the acid test of correct engineering, superb workmanship, and fine materials.

When it is realized that Mr. Miller is 52 years old and not a professional road driver this remarkable test of mechanical and physical endurance becomes even more remarkable.

No one need follow Mr. Miller's strenuous example to enjoy the advantages of the quality that makes the Wills Sainte Claire so different from all other cars. There is always a certain zest in the car's performance under any conditions that is an indescribable pleasure to the driver.

There is a keen satisfaction, too, in knowing these qualities are inexhaustible and unfailing—which is one of the reasons why the car is so widely recognized by discerning buyers as the permanent investment in personal transportation.

You will find a ride in a Wills Sainte Claire a rare experience and a genuine pleasure, and this pleasure is yours for the asking.

MUCH OF NEW YORK MILK IS FAR BELOW STANDARD

Inspecting Force Is Too Small to Make Adequate Tests, Says Commissioner Harris, "Bootleg" Milk Is Sold Here And "Loose" Milk Endangers Public Health

THE milk supply of New York City has been under scrutiny in recent days and has been found wanting in many important particulars. The Department of Health, whose duty it is to maintain the purity and the quality of the thousands of gallons that pour daily into the metropolitan market, discloses that inspection is often perfunctory, that the present organization of inspectors is far too small to protect the public and that there has been actual corruption of officials, so that "bootleg" milk, or milk that has not even attempted to pass the city's required tests, is sold widely.

Dr. Louis I. Harris, Health Commissioner of the new Walker Administration, has undertaken a campaign of correction and education to establish purity and high quality in the city's milk supply. He finds that much of the "loose" milk sold here falls short of the standards set by the law. He has undertaken to rout milk "bootleggers," to insist upon adequate examination of the milk supply and to raise new safeguards against the dangers that surround the product when it is poorly handled. In particular he will work to end the sale of milk from open cans in stores and wagons, for it is in this class of milk that he finds the worst evils. With most of the bottled milk sold here he has no quarrel.

New York's "Milk Shed."

The resources of seven States and two Provinces of Canada—Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont, Ontario and Quebec—are needed to supply New York's daily consumption of 3,000,000 quarts. This tide of milk pours into the city by twenty railroads and is carried in special trains running at top speed. Many a modest passenger train has to take the siding in order that the milk for the city's breakfast may go forward.

The so-called "milk shed" represents an area within 250 miles and a night's haul. But a considerable part of the supply is shipped 500 to 600 miles and is on the way sixteen hours. The tendency to open new reserves further away gains steadily.

Care in selecting the city's milk and in perfecting the organization necessary to handle this great volume has been developed to a high point. Theoretically the system has few deficiencies, but in practice, it is said, there is much to be desired. Dr. Harris points out that lack of funds and lawmanning made it impossible to inspect the milk at its source and after delivery with necessary thoroughness. As a result many abuses have flourished until laxity, haste and even bribery, it is charged, have combined to raise grave problems.

When a farmer in Pike County, Pennsylvania, decides that he would like to put his milk upon the New York breakfast table he applies to the nearest creamery serving this market. There are 60,000 of these farmers in the tributary territory and 450 pasteurizing plants. The neighborhood plant must supply the farmer's name to the New York Department of Health, after which his herd and his premises are inspected. This inspection extends to condition of cows, construction of stables, place of milking, cleanliness of utensils and surroundings, the health of milk handlers and the care of the product. Stations must be visited regularly. For that task there are eleven inspectors. In 1908 the city had thirty-five.

Handling in the City.

Once a farmer's herd and facilities have passed muster he becomes a regular source of supply for the near-by creamery, which ordinarily handles the milk of fifty to seventy-five farms. Each creamery has a license to ship either Grade A or Grade B milk, but never both. About half of all the milk received in New York is pasteurized at these collecting stations. The other half passes through forty plants in the city.

Nine-tenths of it is shipped in cans. Eighteen additional inspectors are at work in New York. They have supervision over eleven railroad milk terminals, forty pasteurizing plants, 18,000 retail establishments and 6,000 automobiles and wagons.

The pasteurizing plants are inspected at least once a month, the retail establishments about four times a year. Samples of milk and cream are taken from each source of supply for bacteriological examination once a month. If the bacteria count is found to exceed regulations the dealer or plant responsible is warned. A third offense brings the penalty of lower grading, the procedure applying to city and country. If chemical analysis shows adulteration criminal prosecution follows, with possible revocation of license.

Seemingly this range of work would make it impossible for the health organization to carry on other activities, but all complaints concerning milk or its handling are investigated, including even anonymous complaints. Special attention is directed to the labeling of products and to exposure at railroad terminals, in the streets, plants, depots or stores.

Samples must be taken from terminals, wagons and stores and other centres of distribution. The hours of work are so arranged that inspectors will be on duty night and day, the greatest vigilance being required in the early hours, when milk is transported from terminals and plants.

The Milk Arrives.

It is the common impression that Grade A or Grade B signifies richness of milk, but these gradings really indicate purity. Dr. Harris explains that no bacteria exist in milk before it leaves the cow. The act of milking and the condition of surroundings inevitably add impurities, represented by bacteria. When the milk in a certain zone served by a creamery is found to contain a specified low average of bacteria it becomes Grade A. The tests for necessary fats and richness are conducted independently.

When the Pike County farmer has met necessary requirements and the local plant has been approved by the department, milk from the newly added dairy begins to reach New York. It is brought to the plant by automobile or wagon and pasteurized or made ready for shipment to New York. Presently the milk train comes along, moving from station to station in the dairy territory until its cars are filled. Even the rail equipment is of a special type built for milk transportation. Not more than 50 degrees Fahrenheit may be maintained en route, as milk at a higher temperature develops unwelcome cultures.

The milk trains usually run at night in the nearer territory. Their schedules and operation are an important part of rail organization. About 1 o'clock in the morning the trains begin to arrive in the eleven terminals, and they follow at short intervals for two or three hours. Tens of thousands of cans are unloaded and moved to the pasteurizing plants. By noon at the latest, every train is clear of its load and is moving again to be reloaded the following night. As the unpasteurized milk reaches the plants it passes through the customary processes. Pasteurized milk goes to the bottling department.

The ordinary time of handling from farm to table is forty-eight hours, and the extreme period seventy-two hours. But all of the milk is not distributed in bottles. Broadly speaking, the bottled product may be pronounced fairly satisfactory to the new Health Commissioner. It is the unbottled or "loose" milk, commonly sold from neighborhood stores, that may contain a peril to health.

Danger in Canned Milk.

"About 55 per cent. of milk distributed in New York passes through these stores, dipped from cans," says Dr. Harris. "I have no hesitation in calling three-fourths of it adulterated before consumption. This means a direct threat to the city's health, particularly in the care of children. Not only is adulteration prevalent, but also the dilution of milk reduces food values to the vanishing point. Thus we have two problems—the threat to health and the absence of required nourishment.

"Milk sold in cans has no defence. It is hygienically wrong and opens the way to temptations that should not exist. I would put every quart of New York's milk into bottles and prohibit the sale of skimmed milk in any form.

"This skimmed milk is bought by dealers under one pretense or another and used to dilute the standard grades. Sometimes they merely pour in water as discretion may dictate.

"In either case the dealer is likely to be caught in time, but the undermanning of our field force makes it impossible to carry on inspections with the precision and the regularity necessary. We need an increase of five to six times our present corps. The chemical department is so overburdened that it could not keep up with the routine of work if each man worked twenty-four hours a day.

"Let New York give me 10 cents additional for each citizen per year and I will guarantee that its milk supply will be impeccable. We have failed to increase our forces or facilities with the expansion of population. Every day the problem of inspection becomes more difficult and extends over a broader territory. As we have fewer inspectors now than in 1908, so our force of chemists also has been reduced. Yet the New York population rises by the week."

In discussing "loose" milk as the undoubted source of many evils, Dr. Harris says that it is usually poor in nutrition and rich in dirt.

A Careless Dealer.

"Every time a cover is lifted from a container the bacteria increase," says he. "With each dipping more bacteria enters. When the street door is open and a breeze is blowing the addition runs into myriads of bacteria. The hands of the dealer or his aids are unclean in some degree and often to a very bad degree. The customer may have brought his pail or bottle from a home where disease exists, and this pail too often is dipped directly into the larger container. Need we wonder that milk sold under such conditions is a fruitful source of disease?

"Rigid inspection at sources of supply and in the pasteurizing plants will not overcome this problem. The method is fundamentally wrong and I hope to have it corrected by enforcing bottling regulations for every sale. At present we cannot embark upon such a program, but it is our goal.

"Another special problem is the supply of bootleg milk, which never could qualify under department regulations, but is slipped into the city surreptitiously and sold on the basis of no questions asked.

"A shifting of tags showing the source might make it possible to bring a whole trainload of bad milk into the city. The range of our duties and our lack of forces limit the extent of inspection at all times. We cannot be present when every train arrives. The bootlegger in milk has plentiful opportunities to ply his trade. And all of our conclusions about adulterated milk apply with greater stress to the milk sold without authority."

Would Pasteurize Here.

Dr. Harris remarks that the pasteurizing of milk in the country has many deficiencies. "I believe that we could hold a sounder position by centralizing pasteurization in New York," he says. "The 450 plants scattered about several States certainly must vary in standards of operation and in efficiency of employes. No matter how frequent the inspections or how earnestly we may try to correct faults, wide variation results in methods.

"The New York State plants approach closely to an average excellence, and it is possible to conduct inspections regularly. We have the opportunity to cooperate with the milk distributors in correcting deficiences. It is my hope to eliminate skimmed milk first, then to insist upon a bottle for every quart, and finally I should like to see pasteurization centred in the city."

CEILINGS OF THE BARBER SHOPS OFFER SPACE FOR ADVERTISING

THE genius of advertising, ever looking about for other worlds to conquer, has hit upon regions hitherto unplacarded. The new field is limited in space for display but rich in what might in the jargon of advertising be called "potentially intensive media."

For the new spaces whose possibilities are being investigated are the ceilings of barber shops and shoeshining stands. It is argued that a high percentage of attention can unquestionably be obtained from a semi-recumbent man being shaved; unless he closes his eyes they must register impressions in glowing colors and various sizes and styles of type if the ceiling is placarded.

Shining "parlors" are a different problem, for here the patron sits upright and can devote his attention to objects in the shop, or read a newspaper while his shoes are polished.

Even the sacrosanct beauty shop of milady is not safe from the inroads of advertising specialists. The barber shop, despite prevalence of bobbed heads, and the shoe shining establishment in a lesser degree are still regarded as primarily masculine retreats. But in the beauty shop an exclusively feminine clientele is reached and why should these ceilings remain inviolate?

Attention is being given in some quarters to the possibilities of all three types of establishments, and among the considerations are the size and patronage of places necessary to assure profitable returns from advertisements. One shining parlor in the Grand Central district has twenty-five attendants and averages from 1,200 to 1,800 patrons a day. One hundred such parlors are said to exist in the city, which would offer a "circulation" of upward of 100,000 daily. A barber shop with fifteen chairs, it is calculated, will accommodate from 400 to 600 daily, and it would be possible, it is said, to reach 400,000 patrons of the barber chair daily.

FOREIGN SCHOOLS PREPARE TOURIST SUMMER COURSES

Trinity College, Dublin, and University of Berlin Adopt Studies for Americans.

AMERICANS abroad for part or all of the Summer vacation season have been taking advantage in increasing numbers of the opportunities for short courses of study at foreign schools and universities.

This year for the first time arrangements have been made through the Institute of International Education, 522 Fifth Avenue, for two such Summer schools, designed especially to meet the needs of American students and adapted to the American college system sufficiently to enable those taking advantage of the plan to receive credits at American schools on their return.

One of these institutions is Trinity College, Dublin, the other is the Institute for Foreigners at the University of Berlin. The courses begin July 15 and continue to Aug. 26.

Work Without Credit.

The point and credit system of American schools is almost unknown abroad. Courses have usually been planned for the Summer on a cultural basis, without thought of credit toward a degree, and chiefly to meet the demands of tourists for a knowledge of the life, literature, language and history of the country in which the school is located. The Summer work of students, especially in England, is frequently done in connection with a walking trip or with the aid of a tutor. Instead of in close class work as in this country.

Trinity College under the present arrangement will offer courses in political science and economics, history, literature and work in the French, Spanish, German and Irish languages. Widely known lecturers will take part.

Trinity was founded under royal charter from Queen Elizabeth in 1592. It is the residence of the Astronomer of Ireland. The library, which contains about 370,000 volumes has received a copy of every book published in England since 1801, and affords remarkable special facilities for the study of Irish paleography.

German Summer Studies.

Work at the University of Berlin will include German art, language and literature, social and political history, and, if the demand warrants, courses in science and other subjects. The language courses are graded from those suitable to the beginner to those for teachers who wish to learn methods of teaching. The institute will also arrange a trip to the Rhine for the week after the close of the Summer school period.

Summer study is also available for American students at French universities, the University of Vienna, the Centro de Estudios Historicos at Madrid, and various Swiss universities. A Summer vacation course from July 10 to 28 has been arranged at Oxford for American women teachers and students through the Secretary of the Committee on International Relations of the American Association of University Women. The Board of Extra-Mural Studies of Cambridge University has also arranged a Summer school for the period from July 29 to Aug. 18.

CITY PLANS FOR MOTOR TRAFFIC

Government Survey to Relieve Chicago Congestion Shows Need of Wider Roads Connecting Outlying Sections

STUDENTS of civic traffic problems and motor vehicle congestion will find considerable instructive material in the report recently made by the Bureau of Public Roads giving the results of its survey of transportation conditions in Cook County, Ill., particularly in the zone surrounding Chicago. The survey was made under the joint supervision of Thomas H. McDonald, chief of the Bureau of Good Roads, and Major George H. Quinlan, Superintendent of Cook County highways.

Chicago, like New York, Detroit and many other large cities has recognized in recent years the seriousness of traffic congestion and its menace to economic and satisfactory commercial growth. The survey was undertaken with the object of making a scientific study of the entire situation upon which might be based a proper highway improvement program for future years.

Under the auspices of the Chicago City Plan Commission a plan of major streets for Chicago has been worked out in which the county highway system is coordinated with the city plan. It includes the construction of pavements on approximately 838 miles of highway, of which approximately 248 miles must be opened as well as paved and the widening of approximately 97 miles of present pavement.

The completion of this plan will provide for Cook County, for Chicago and for the surrounding area a highway system which will serve the large volume of present highway traffic in the area and the expected increase of traffic in the immediate future. Work is under way and several miles of new construction was finished last year.

J. Gordon McKay, Chief of the Division of Highway Transport in the Bureau of Public Roads, and who directed the actual survey work, says in his report that the building of highways in the Chicago area, in spite of a continuous construction program, has not kept pace with the increasing volume of traffic. During the period, 1913 to 1925 there were constructed in the county 346 miles of paved highways at a cost of approximately $10,440,000, nearly one mile of improved highway for every two square miles of area. Since 1920 the mileage of improved highway per registered motor vehicle has been steadily decreasing.

"On the basis of past experience," he says, "highway traffic may be expected to increase even more rapidly than population. The traffic is closely related to the number of traffic units as reflected in motor vehicle registration and the registration is increasing more rapidly than the population. In 1914, 31,869 motor vehicles were registered in Chicago, or one vehicle for 75.7 persons. In 1924 the registration of motor vehicles was 305,143, or one vehicle for 9.64 persons.

"Vehicles registered in the City of Chicago dominate the traffic on the highways of the county. More than 50 per cent. of all trucks recorded on county highways were registered in the city, and trucks registered in the city exceeded by 65 per cent. the trucks registered in the county exclusive of the city. It is probable that the distribution of passenger-car registration is quite similar."

The survey revealed the lack of continuous through routes from and to the city and outlying sections, a condition which exists in many other cities. It was pointed out that there is no continuous east-west route across the county between the Lincoln Highway, which crosses the southern part of the county, and 111th Street, twelve miles to the north. By the development of seven and one-half miles of new highway in that section it will be possible to provide five additional continuous east-west routes.

City Highway Problems.

A few miles of new road to close the gaps in the north-south highways will open three additional through routes. The same condition exists in other sections of the county. By paving approximately 680 miles of new highways a large number of present non-through routes will be connected and converted into through routes, and the traffic capacity of the system greatly increased.

Mr. McKay sums up the traffic difficulties, not only of Chicago but practically of all our large cities, very concisely as follows:

"The rapid growth of population and motor vehicle registration, the decrease of improved highway mileage in proportion to motor vehicle registration, the lack of improved city connections and sufficient through routes in this city, the lack of adjustment of the present highway system to traffic needs, gaps in the present highway system and the natural and artificial barriers to highway development are the principal causes of the inadequacy of the present highway system and of traffic congestion."

Discussing the delays and consequent costs and loss of time to the business community, he cites the fact that during an eight-hour period at a railroad crossing on Western Avenue, where traffic exceeds 15,000 vehicles per day, the crossing was blocked an average of 17 minutes per hour, and during one hour was closed 30 minutes.

The major purpose of the survey was to determine the character of road improvements on the basis of three important factors. They were: First, present and estimated future traffic density; second, the average daily number of motor trucks of large, medium and small capacity using various sections of the system; third, maximum wheel loads and the frequency of heavy gross loads and wheel loads.

"In general," explains Mr. McKay, "these factors govern the choice of the type of pavement and the design and width of the improvement, though the final planning for each specific improvement must consider financial and physical factors, such as the cost of the improvement in relation to traffic use, topography, drainage, soil and subgrade conditions, and availability and cost of materials."

Looking ahead to traffic conditions in Chicago in 1930, the report gives an estimated motor vehicle registration of 670,500 cars, an increase of 119 per cent. over the 1924 figures. It is prophesied that Western Avenue near the city line may be expected to carry an average of 33,600 vehicles per day. At least five other routes may be expected to carry a daily average in excess of 10,000 vehicles near the city line.

"If the present ratio," adds Mr. McKay, "between average traffic and Sunday traffic continues until 1930, in excess of 20,000 vehicles may be expected to attempt to use each of these routes on the average Sunday. In view of the present congestion of traffic on these routes, particularly on Sundays, this great increase in traffic will result in impossible traffic conditions."

The proposed improvement plan, he states, must provide for highways which will provide efficient service to the large volume of present and expected future traffic. The additional present cost of high-type improvements will be more than equalized by savings in future highway maintenance costs and motor vehicle operating costs. Improvements must be designed to carry the expected volume of heavy truck traffic as well as the large total number of vehicles.

GASOLINE TAX YIELDS $146,000,000 IN 1925

FIGURES recently compiled by the Bureau of Public Roads showed that during 1925 the sum of $146,028,940 was paid in gasoline taxes by motor vehicle operators. It is an increase of 35 per cent. over the amount collected in 1924 and four and one-half times the total of 1923. The increase is due to the larger number of motor vehicles, the adoption of the tax by States which had not previously imposed it, and higher rates of taxation in several States.

The gasoline motor tax is collected by forty-four States and the District of Columbia. The four States which do not impose the tax are New York, New Jersey, Illinois and Massachusetts.

Of the total tax collected, $102,065,216 was available for State highways, $32,721,704 for county and local roads, $217,393 was used in collection costs and $11,024,627 went for other purposes.

The total tax amount was collected upon 6,457,783,284 gallons of gasoline, making the average tax rate 2.26 cents per gallon. The average consumption per vehicle was about 430 gallons. In the forty-four States in which the tax was levied the average amount paid by the motor vehicle operator was $9.22.

The tax ratio varies from 1 to 5 cents. South Carolina was the only State last year which imposed a 5-cent-per-gallon tax, but on Feb. 21 last Kentucky increased its rate from 3 to 5 cents, and last month Virginia advanced its rate from 3 to 4½ cents.

TRADE NOTES AND COMMENTS

THOMAS J. LITTLE JR., who recently resigned as chief engineer of the Lincoln car division of the Ford Motor Company, has been made Vice President in charge of engineering of Copeland Products, Inc., makers of electrical refrigeration systems in Detroit. Mr. Little is President of the Society of Automotive Engineers.

Robert B. Cole of the Hudson Motor Car Company of New York states that sales of Hudson and Essex cars in the metropolitan area within the last month have almost doubled the number during the similar 1925 period.

Sales of Packard cars in the metropolitan territory during March exceeded those of any other month in the history of the New York Packard Company.

A new motor tourist camp will be opened on May 1 in the upper Bronx section on Conner Street, close to Boston Post Road and fronting 1,500 feet on the Hutchinson River. It will be known as Camp Broadway. There is a community house with electric kitchen facilities, restaurant, hot and cold showers, children's playground and tent accommodations.

Captain "Eddie" Rickenbacker announces that there will be no price changes, neither up nor down, during the balance of the present season; and no model changes are anticipated in the same period. The company, he says, is highly satisfied with its present line of Rickenbacker sixes and eights and sees no reason for changing construction or sales policy.

Nash and Ajax shipments in March were 16,265 cars. This is the nineteenth consecutive month that the Nash business has shown an increase over the corresponding month of the previous year.

With a total of 65,041 automobiles produced during March, the Chevrolet Motor Company broke all previous monthly records. The original March schedule was set for 57,000 cars.

The C. H. Jennings firm, metropolitan Dodge Brothers' car distributers, reports sales in March in its territory aggregated 1,297 cars, exceeding March last year by 774 cars. It made a new record sales month for the firm.

J. T. Trumble has been appointed chief engineer of the F. B. Stearns Company of Cleveland. He was formerly with the Olds Motor Company.

The Marmon Automobile Company of New York is holding a Spring show of special designs in motor cars at Broadway and Sixty-second Street. There are a number of special features which distinguish the interiors. They comprise treatments of new upholstery, lighting schemes, distinctive hardware, trimming and finishing.

Velie interests in the metropolitan district have been taken over by the W. A. G. Motors Corporation, headed by W. A. George, sales and service headquarters all at 40 West Sixty-second Street.

The Buick Motor Company in March shipped from the factory 29,305 cars, a new monthly record. The previous high mark was in October, 1925, when 22,850 cars were sent out. That record, however, has been broken every month this year. In January the shipments were 23,265 cars, and in February the record was 23,294 cars.

Robert P. Aull has been appointed in charge of sales analysis with the Willys-Overland Company of Toledo. He was formerly with the Dodge Brothers Motor Company.

The Clymer windshield spotlight patent has been held valid in the United States District Court of the Northern District of Illinois. Under the patent the Fyrac Night Guide is sole licensee.

AUTO SERVICE METHODS AT NATIONAL SHOWS

AN important feature of the New York and Chicago national automobile shows in January, 1927, will be demonstrations of modern methods of servicing motor cars and trucks. Samuel A. Miles, in announcing this addition, states that the two big shows will contain a segregated operating and demonstrating service equipment section. It will be arranged so as to appeal both to the trade and the public, with the object of promoting the use of modern machinery and tools and scientific methods in automotive service work.

The automotive maintenance equipment show, which was conducted in the Spring of 1924 and 1925 in connection with the national automotive service convention at Detroit, will not be held this year.

It is intended to have the service equipment sections open only to the trade during the early part of the day, making it convenient for manufacturers to demonstrate and equipment users to study the machinery on exhibit. In the evening it will be open for the education of the motoring public.

HIGHER SPEED IN BROOKLYN PARKS

Success of One-Way System in Reducing Accidents in Prospect Park May Lead to Its Adoption for Central Park

PARK Commissioner James J. Browne of Brooklyn states that the recent decision to make the main drives in Prospect Park one-way thoroughfares has been successful in reducing motor accidents. The rule went into effect last February, and during that month only two accidents in the park were reported and these were due to skidding on the ice. Statistics of the Brooklyn Park Department show that in 1924 and 1925 there were 622 automobile accidents in the park. The one-way system was adopted to see if it would help in reducing the accident list.

"This Prospect Park experiment has attracted the interest of Commissioner Gallatin of the Manhattan park system. He is said to be watching it carefully and if it continues to show successful results the plan may be adopted for Central Park.

Defective or glaring headlights were evidently to blame for last year's accident list in Prospect Park, for Commissioner Browne found in analyzing the various causes that many accidents were due to the fact that drivers were blinded by the lights of approaching cars.

Another innovation established by the new Brooklyn Commissioner is increasing the speed limit from fifteen to twenty miles an hour in Prospect Park and the Eastern Parkway and to twenty-five miles an hour on Ocean Parkway. These higher speed regulations in the park have been sanctioned by the Commissioners in other boroughs.

"Speed in the parks and parkways is a matter under the control of the Board of Park Commissioners," says Commissioner Browne, explaining the recent changes in the current issue of The Long Island Auto Courier, published by the Long Island Automobile Club. "I introduced a resolution empowering each Commissioner to raise the limits under his own jurisdiction. The other members voted with me, but have not yet taken advantage of the resolution.

"When I took office the legal limit in the parks and on the parkways was fifteen miles per hour. From my own experience I know that very few drivers hold down to fifteen miles per hour, and that those who do merely interfere with the others, endangering everybody. I could not see the sense of making all drivers lawbreakers and determined to secure a schedule of speed limits more in accord with general custom.

"Another item in this year's park program, which cannot be put into effect so promptly, has to do with shrubbery along the driveways. There is no question that the shrubbery of Prospect Park is very beautiful, but it is also true that in a number of cases it has been absolutely dangerous. Many accidents have been caused by the inability of drivers to see approaching cars or pedestrians at a crossing, the view being obstructed by bushes.

"An unobstructed view of at least 100 feet is essential at every crossing, in my opinion. It has been decided that wherever the foliage does not permit such a view the shrubbery must be moved. This will take some time, as scores of places need attention."

BALLOON TIRE CHANGING

A SIMPLE way to mount a balloon tire and rim on a wheel is to insert the valve stem through the wheel hole while the wheel is around on one side instead of at the top.

Once the stem is in the hole, the tire can be lifted up and on the wheel by simply turning the latter a quarter turn. This saves actually lifting the tire. The wheel should not be too high off the ground.

"That Marmon certainly does step right along."

"You can't beat it. It's like the Century on the down grade."

THEY say the millionaire rarely spends his income. But think of his satisfaction knowing the sky is his limit. It's the same with Marmon ownership.. You may never employ its top speed. But it's there! You are superior to any ground-covering emergency.

OLD AND NEW WORLD TO EXCHANGE PICTURES BY RADIO

DISCOVERY MADE 84 YEARS AGO IS BASIS FOR PHOTO-RADIO

Captain R. H. Ranger, Inventor, Says Development Started in 1842—He Tells How the Old and New Systems Work

COMMERCIAL transmission of pictures across the Atlantic will begin next month, according to an announcement made by officials of the Radio Corporation of America attending the conference of the International Wireless Committee at Monte Carlo. A test is scheduled for April 20 between New York and London, when personal messages exchanged between President Coolidge and King George in their own handwriting may be sent across the sea.

The science of picture transmission is as old as wire communication, and was not born suddenly with radio, Captain R. H. Ranger, inventor of the pen-and-ink photo-radiogram system, points out in this month's issue of the proceedings of the Institute of Radio Engineers.

"Transmission of pictures electrically had its inception almost at the same time as straight telegraphy," said Captain Ranger. "In 1842 Alexander Bain, an English physicist, first proposed a device to send pictures from one place to another by electric wires. His plan is so basically correct that it is only right at the beginning to show the simplicity of his plan and how, generally, we are following in his footsteps.

"He had two pendulums, which were arranged electrically in such a manner that if one preceded the other by a slight amount of the time of a stroke it was held until the other had reached the same position, when both then began a new stroke. These swinging pendulums were the basic synchronizers which are necessary in the transmission of pictures. On each swing, a tablet descended a notch at a time at the side of the pendulum. At the transmitting station the swinging arcs of the pendulum carried a small contactor which rode over type faces, making the appropriate electric contacts to be sent to the distant receiver where a similar swinging pendulum was tracing the path across a piece of paper. By chemical action, the electricity received from the transmitter would discolor the paper at the receiver to give an impression of the original."

Elements of Radio-Photos.

Captain Ranger explained that these are the basic elements of all picture transmission by wire and radio. First, the synchronous action covering a surface point by point at both transmitter and receiver and the electrical identification of the point value to correspond between the transmitter and receiver.

Eighty-four years have passed since this initial step and thousands have been employed in the field of research, yet all the fundamental conceptions of solving the problem were not realized until recent years. The development of accurate instruments is given credit for workers being able to produce radio-pictures from the great storehouse of information collected for eighty years.

"It has taken eighty years," said Captain Ranger, "from the first inception to come to commercial operation because it is inherently more difficult to send a picture than it is to send a telegraph message or the voice. Picture transmission requires exactly what these two other transmissions do, which is to depend upon intensity variation with time; but it must do the additional job of indicating the points on an area for which these values must be represented. Furthermore, whereas with the eye a whole picture is taken in at a glance due to the fact that there are separate eye nerves for each portion of the area covered by the picture, in communication channels, we are naturally restricted to taking a point at a time for each communication channel. Therefore, practically every system to date has been, and still is, on the basis of dividing the picture up into small unit areas and to transmit their values one after the other."

Captain Ranger said that the large storehouse of electrical and mechanical contrivances featured a Denison facsimile of telegraph tape, taken in 1901; the Korn system of 1922; that of Bart-Lane in 1922; Belin, 1924; Ferree, 1924; Jenkins, 1924, and the results of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company in 1925.

The inventor explained that economics is as important a factor in the transmission of pictures by wire and radio as it was in the establishment of the telegraph, and the reason that the Morse code still exists is because it is the most economical means of getting a given amount of words from one point to another in the shortest time with the least power over the greatest distance and through the greatest amount of interference.

Captain Ranger's photo-radio system is operated by placing the picture or handwriting in the form of a film on a glass cylinder in which there is a strong gas arc-light which sends its rays by lenses through the film placed on the cylinder to a motion-picture lens focused on the film. This throws an image of the film onto a photo-electric cell, point by point. As the cylinder revolves, each portion of the picture is shown progressively to the photo-cell. The photo-cell is then moved bodily down the cylinder length so that the entire picture is gradually built up line upon line. The photo-cell transforms the light wave into electricity which actuates the transmitting apparatus and corresponding ether waves are broadcast.

AMATEURS TO HOLD CONVENTION IN MAY

THE crystal-controlled short wave transmitter with which Lieut. Commander F. H. Schnell did such remarkable work while with the American battle fleet on Summer manoeuvres during 1925 is to be brought to New York. Commander S. C. Hooper, U. S. N., has promised that it will be set up and operating at the exhibition which is to be a prominent feature of the forthcoming Hudson Division American Radio Relay League Convention in New York on May 13, 14 and 15, at the Engineering Societies Building, 29 West Thirty-ninth Street.

More than a dozen prominent manufacturers of amateur transmitting and receiving equipment will display their latest wares at the exhibition. Among others these will include the General Radio Company, which will have a complete piezo-electric quartz crystal-controlled oscillator in operation for the calibration of wave meters and receivers in both the broadcast and amateur wave-length bands. The Vibroplex Company, manufacturers of the semi-automatic transmitting key so widely used by commercial companies and amateur for both wire and radio use, will also stage an exhibit in charge of an expert operator, who will instruct in the use of the key and assist owners of the equipment to make the best adjustments for maximum efficiency. Other exhibitors include the Radio Corporation of America, the Alden Manufacturing Company, both Jewel and Weston, manufacturers of indicating meters, the Allen D. Cardwell Company, Tobe Deutschmann and the Burgess Battery Company.

The feature of the convention is to be a course of lectures covering six hours and given by the foremost authorities on short-wave amateur and broadcast reception and transmission.

LATEST COPYRIGHT BILL AVOIDS ROYALTY FIXED BY CONGRESS

IN the third and latest copyright bill introduced by Representative Vestal of Indiana, he attempts to avoid Congress fixing the amount radio stations shall pay owners of copyrighted compositions used for broadcasting purposes. Expressing the belief that the Dill-Vestal bills, now pending in the House and Senate, will fail because they would require Congress to stipulate a price for broadcasting compositions, Mr. Vestal believes his newest bill would have a better chance for favorable consideration.

"The new bill I have introduced," Mr. Vestal explained, "provides that radio broadcasters, hotel orchestras, cabarets, in fact anybody playing copyrighted music, shall have the right to deal directly with the owner of the music.

"Also it provides that if the owner of the copyright wants to reserve the right for broadcasting he must so state and fix the price so that the broadcaster, hotel, or whoever wants to use it may know exactly what he must pay for it.

"And further, the bill provides that the owner of the copyright shall affix on some accessible place on such music and upon phonograph, disc, cylinder or other contrivance for the mechanical reproduction, a notice of the amount of royalty prescribed for any use of such music for public performance for profit.

"Thus the copyright owner fixes his own price instead of the matter of price being put up to Congress. Likewise, when the music is released for the purpose of broadcasting to one, it is released to all."

WGN TO RECREATE OLD-TIME PRIZEFIGHTS

The second of a series of "Old Time Prizefights" will be presented by WGN Saturday evening at 9:30 o'clock, Central Standard Time. Listeners will be taken back into the past to view the famous Sullivan-Corbett fight at New Orleans, when "John L." lost the championship of the world to the phantom from San Francisco.

Unique means have been devised to recreate these battles that are famous in the lore of fistiana. Listeners are asked to imagine themselves and their radio sets back in the last century while WGN broadcasts the fight just as it does its big sports features today, with microphones to catch the cheers of the crowd and the sounds of the contest. Quin Ryan is at the microphone during the battle describing the scene, the actions of the crowd and the work of the two pugilists in much the same manner he announces a football or baseball game today. The entire scene is rebuilt in the WGN studio, with local color supplied by all the various means known to radio. The running story of the fight is derived from eyewitness descriptions of the scene and from old newspaper reports.

RADIO NARRATIVE OF DANIEL

Program on Tuesday From Fourteen Stations Will Centre Around Biblical Story of the Lion's Den

THE program to be radiated by WEAF and a chain of stations Tuesday from 9 to 10 P. M., Eastern Standard Time, will centre around Harvey Ender's musical setting of Vachel Lindsay's poem, "Daniel."

The poem, while it does not follow the biblical narrative of Daniel in its entirety, it is a modern interpretation of one or two of the outstanding incidents of Daniel's life. The incident of Daniel in the lions' den is one which is prominently mentioned throughout the song. The story of Daniel as interpreted by this song begins with the tale of the lions which King Darius, the Mede, kept in a den and which daily fed upon Christian men. Daniel, who is cast in the rôle of a servant of Darius, was a Christian, and because he continually talked religion was thrown into the lions' den. King Darius commands the lions to "bite Daniel" and the lions' reply was "We want Daniel." The story continues with the angel Gabriel chaining the lions and releasing Daniel from the den, whereupon the King restores him to his former position. Throughout the balance of the hour an instrumental and vocal group will be heard in a program of selections of miscellaneous character.

The transmitters linked with WEAF will be WEEI, WFI, WCAE, WGR, WWJ, WOC, KSD, WJAR, WCCO, WTAG, WGN, WEAR and WSAI.

FINDS NEW ORLEANS IN STATIC POCKET

RETURNING from a trip to Atlanta, Nashville, New Orleans, Jacksonville, Tampa and Miami, W. E. Downey, technical radio expert of the Department of Commerce, reports enthusiasm for radio at all points excepting Key West.

"The stations I visited are doing good work," Mr. Downey said, "and programs are very much appreciated by the people in those vicinities."

Mr. Downey also reported that static conditions were giving some trouble. He found it worst in New Orleans, where it was frequently impossible for them to get anything outside of Texas and a few Chicago stations. KDKA, he added, was the most constantly heard. He said that New Orleans seemed to be in a sort of static pocket at the present time.

His trip was part of a program mapped out by the Department of Commerce to see what the needs of certain radio districts might be, on the chance the Department of Commerce secures the added appropriations provided for in the bill now pending in the Senate.

BRITISH RADIO CHAIN NEARING COMPLETION

THE British Postmaster General, Sir W. Mitchell-Thomson, has recently made the following statement before the House of Commons in connection with the imperial wireless chain:

"The contractors hope to complete the Bodmin and Bridgewater stations, which are to be used for the Canadian and South African services, early in April, and the Grimsby and Skegness stations, which are to be used for the Indian and Australian services, in August next. The corresponding stations in India and the Dominions will, it is understood, be completed about the same time as the English stations.

"The tests of the Rugby station show that it can be received in all parts of the world. The station has been used regularly for the Official Wireless News Service since Jan. 1, and for the transmission of long-distance radiotelegrams to ships since Jan. 31. Owing to its world-wide range, messages can be sent from Rugby to ships at any point on the high seas, however remote; and considerable use is being made of the new facilities thus afforded. The question of operating other services from Rugby is under consideration."

ONE-FIFTH OF RURAL HOMES USE RADIO

RADIO'S VALUE ON THE FARM REVEALED BY 1200 SCOUTS

Survey Covering 18,456 Farms in Forty-two States Gives Impresarios of the Ether Information for Program Structure

ONE-FIFTH of the farm homes in the United States have radio sets, according to a survey of more than eighteen thousand farm homes made by representatives of WLS, Chicago.

Twenty-five per cent. of the farmers prefer music to any other program; 24 per cent. are making the most of the practical side of radio, using the receivers regularly to get the daily weather and market reports. This was found to be especially true among corn belt farmers in Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Indiana and Ohio, where 42 per cent. report that they rely almost entirely on weather and market information which the radio brings them. Down in the cotton country, both east and west of the Mississippi, 3 per cent. only give this as an important feature of their radio programs.

The farmer is just beginning to realize the educational value of his radio set, according to officials of WLS. Only 16 per cent. are interested in the farm schools and lectures offered by universities and other agricultural organizations. Radios are relatively few in the cotton States west of the Mississippi, Texas, Oklahoma, Mississippi and Louisiana, but 26 per cent. of them are tuned in regularly to the call of the school bell. Twenty-three per cent. of the wheat belt and 20 per cent. of the corn belt farmers are going to school fairly regularly via radio. These three are the sections best served by stations which specialize in programs for farm folk.

Church and sports via radio make little appeal to the farmer, according to his wife's report on him.

Household Talks Popular.

Farm women generally prefer the household home-makers' programs, for 41 per cent. tune-in on these most frequently. Thirty-one per cent. prefer musical programs, 8 per cent. want lectures, 1 per cent. are especially interested in farm talks on gardens and poultry, and 3 per cent. enjoy their radio most for the church services and sacred music it brings them.

The housewives of New England poll the largest vote for the home-makers' hour, with its hints on economics and new recipes; corn belt farm wives run them a close second, probably due to the circumstances that these two sections are close to stations which specialize in programs of help and interest to rural homes.

Farm women in the tobacco lands, Kentucky and the Virginias, seem to prefer music, and they likewise are the most enthusiastic about church and religious programs. Women in the cotton-growing States west of the Mississippi enjoy the serious, educational programs; 37 per cent. will always "fish" around in the ether after a lecture for distant stations.

But farm folk, on the whole, are not prone to be fussy about the kind of entertainment they can get over the air; 18 per cent. of the men and 16 per cent. of their wives refuse to state a preference, because they like it all so well.

The most radios are found in the New England States, New York and Pennsylvania, where they have invaded 38 per cent. of the homes. The central corn belt, Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, runs a close second with 33 per cent. But the eastern cotton States should be the radio salesman's paradise, for radio has found its way into only 3 per cent. of the homes, according to the survey of WLS.

The survey covers 18,456 typical American farm homes in forty-two States, and was gathered by some twelve hundred scouts or observers, each of whom studied carefully the conditions in a small group of homes in her own neighborhood. The survey is being made in an effort to help the farm woman herself to find out how her home, her working conditions, her chances for social life and health protection for her families compare with those of women in other walks of life.

Farm Council Survey.

Radio is changing the marketing methods of entire groups of farmers, according to a nation-wide survey recently concluded by the National Farm Radio Council.

Importance of radio in the marketing of farm products is illustrated in the National Farm Radio Council survey by reports from forty-three States, more than 46 per cent. of the replies giving specific examples of cash savings effected by the use of radio. Practically every report indicated the importance and value to the farmer of having market reports from twenty-four to forty-eight hours earlier than they are obtainable through any other medium.

Typical of hundreds of reports of the farmer's use of radio in marketing is this one from a farmer living near Keytesville, Mo.: "Radio reported hogs due to drop in two days. Shipped at once. Saved $150. In same week put off haying because of storm warning. This prevented heavy loss of hay."

In conducting this nation-wide radio survey the council gathered and tabulated 44,550 individual expressions. The survey was conducted in cooperation with fifteen farm publications with an aggregate circulation of 3,086,409, 450 county agents, 200 boys and girls' club leaders, 150 home demonstration agents, the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau Federation, several hundred teachers of vocational agriculture, deans of thirty-seven colleges and several radio stations.

"Ninety-five per cent. of farmer-radio owners," the survey shows, "think of their radios as a utility as well as an amusement device. They think of it as a utility because it brings to them market reports from twenty-four to forty-eight hours earlier than obtainable in any other way. These enable the farmer to market his produce to his greatest advantage.

In forty-three States the number of farms reporting radio sets, Illinois, whose farms number 255,601, leads with 27,434 sets. Then comes New York with 188,754 farms and 24,620 sets.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By ORRIN E. DUNLAP Jr.

QUESTION—I live in a double house with ordinary lath and plaster partition between my neighbor's side and mine. He has a Radiola superheterodyne and I have a Radiola III-A with an outdoor antenna. Whenever I operate my set he cannot operate his set, which is equipped with an indoor loop. His set does not affect mine. What can you suggest to stop the trouble?—M. W. Answer—Change the location of the outdoor antenna. The outdoor wire probably has a blanketing effect upon the indoor loop, but when the loop is turned in certain positions the outdoor wire should have just the opposite result and intensify the signal strength. Keep the outdoor antenna and lead-in as far from the superheterodyne as possible.

Question—How far from the microphone should an orchestra and accompanying singing performers be for the best results in broadcasting?—H. K. Answer—The distance of the microphone from the entertainers depends upon a variety of factors, chiefly number and type of instruments in the orchestra, volume of the singers' voices and size of the studio and the acoustics of the room.

Question—I recently bought a six-tube Thermiodyne set. This is my first set and I know practically nothing about radio. Answers to the following questions will be very much appreciated:

(1) My "B" batteries lasted just ten days. They and my storage battery were gone at the same time. Can you suggest what may have caused this?

(2) I fail to get stations with a wave length below 250. At the store where I bought the set they tell me I shouldn't expect to get low stations, that all sets have this same weakness, and that you have to build a set specially to get these low stations. Is this correct?

(3) I have only a thirty-foot indoor aerial. One of the store's representatives told me I could get fine results by increasing this to 100 feet. I get only the local stations.) Another of their representatives told me the thirty-foot aerial is best. Which is right?

(4) When a storage battery has just been recharged, should the liquid cover all the plates?

(5) A friend has suggested that I hitch my indoor aerial to my telephone wire. The phone has been removed. Would there be anything illegal or dangerous about this?

(6) Should I have a lightning arrester on such an arrangement?—F. O.

Answer—The "B" batteries may be wired wrong so that they are short circuited. It would be natural for the storage battery to run down in ten days if the set was in use daily. Inspect all battery connections. (2) All broadcast receivers are not designed to tune much below 250 meters. However, there are several designed to cover from 200 to 550 meters. To tune in short waves, under 100 meters, a special short wave circuit is required. (3) The antenna is much too short. For best results use an outdoor wire about 100 feet long, including the lead-in. (4) Yes; the electrolyte should always cover the plates. When the electrolyte gets low add distilled water. (5) It would not be a good plan unless you are familiar with the wire and where it runs and what it connects with. (6) All outdoor antenna should be protected by lightning arresters.

Question—What is the call of the ice patrol in the North Atlantic?—B. C. C. Answer—NIDK.

Question—What is the short wave length used by NAJ, Great Lakes, N. J., since the long wave arc set was discontinued?—A. D. Answer—Thirty-four meters.

Question—I am planning to build a transmitting set. Can you tell me the advantages, if any, in the flatwise wound inductances?—B. S. E. Answer—Lower distributed capacity.

Question—What is the call of the steamship Chantier of the Byrd Arctic expedition?—J. H. T. Answer—Chantier's call is KEGK.

Question—Is WDAF, Kansas City, now part of WEAF's regular chain or was it just connected to the circuit for one or two programs last week? We are wondering if we will be able to get the New York programs regularly through WDAF.—V. E. Answer—WDAF has contracted to take WEAF'S programs on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9 to 11 P. M., Eastern Standard Time.

Question—Is it possible to operate an Atwater Kent compact set with good reception and volume to operate a loudspeaker using 6-volt tubes but dry cells as the "A" battery?—F. L. S. Answer—It would be more economical to use a storage battery because the 6-volt tubes will drain the dry cells more rapidly than would tubes designed to work with dry cells.

LOSS IN VOLUME CAUSED BY VARIETY OF FACTORS

Batteries Not Always to Blame When Stations Become Faint—Suggestions to Help Locate And Remedy Sources of Trouble

WHEN a radio receiver fails to give its customary volume the "B" batteries are often blamed. It is true that they are sometimes the cause of the trouble, but it is advisable to measure their voltage before arriving at conclusions. The "B" batteries should be tested with a voltmeter, and after the set has been in operation for several hours. Batteries recuperate while idle, and if tested after an idle period the voltmeter will show a higher reading than it would if the measurement were made after the batteries were in use.

Battery experts estimate that a good make of "B" battery of adequate size should last, even with a receiver consuming heavy "B" battery current, for at least six months, and if it is a moderately economical receiver, from nine to twelve months, provided it is given the average use of about two hours per day. Failure to give such life is an indication either that it is a battery of inferior make or of inadequate capacity for the set used or that there is a defect in the receiver.

Reasons for Short Life.

Factors most frequently causing short "B" battery life are: Audio-frequency amplifier not equipped with "C" battery; "C" battery exhausted; excessive plate voltage; tubes draw excessive current because of accidental displacement of grid and plate; "B" battery of insufficient capacity for the drain placed upon it.

This last cause is frequently overlooked because the first cost of large batteries is somewhat more than that of small ones. But it is indeed a wasteful practice to use a battery of inadequate capacity; this is apparent if the cost is figured in cents per hour of use, rather than in first cost. On the face of it, it seems more expensive to pay about 25 per cent. more for a heavy duty "B" battery, but the economy is apparent when the heavy duty lasts twice as long in service as the "large" size battery. The savings are even greater when heavy duty "B" batteries are substituted for the small portable size batteries which are sometimes erroneously used for home receivers. There have been cases when "B" battery maintenance cost has been reduced from 12 cents an hour to 2 cents an hour, by using a heavy duty or extra large size "B" batteries when volume fails. The slightly increased volume which new "B" batteries give may lead to the conclusion that an exhausted "B" battery was the cause of the reduced volume. A "B" battery voltmeter, however, might show only a normal fall in voltage, which would not account for the reduction in volume.

Tubes Wear Out.

In such cases it is advisable to inspect the antennae connections for a broken or corroded lead-in, loose ground connection, worn out "C" battery or lost magnetization of loudspeaker unit. Still another cause of reduced volume is the loss of active material on the tube filaments. Quoting from The Technical News Bulletin, issued by the National Bureau of Standards:

"Electron tubes in radio receiving sets eventually lose their sensitivity. This sometimes progresses to the point where the receiving set operates very poorly or not at all, even though the tube filament is not burned out. The user of the set frequently confuses this condition with that due to an exhausted "B" battery. If the tubes are of the thoriated tungsten (X-L) filament type, they can usually be rejuvenated by a simple process, and made to serve as well as new tubes in the receiving set."

A simple process of rejuvenation, which can be performed at home, consists in disconnecting the "B" battery from the set and burning the filaments at full brilliance for a half hour. Usually this restores the filaments to full activity.

The two major causes of reduced volume are exhausted "B" batteries and worn out tube filaments. It is easy to determine which is responsible for the loss of volume. A good, reliable voltmeter will indicate the condition of the "B" batteries. If each 45-volt "B" battery registers 34 volts or more, the cause of reduced volume lies elsewhere, probably with the tubes. Lacking a reliable voltmeter to test "B" batteries, a good plan is to have on hand one or two spare tubes which are known to be in good condition. Substitute the new tubes for those in the set, and if this makes a marked improvement in volume it is an indication that the old tubes require re-activation or removal.

GERMAN MAIL CARRIERS COLLECT RADIO FEES

THE license fees in Germany are collected by the letter carriers of the Postoffice Department, so that very little administrative expense is incurred. The Government is also obtaining a considerable revenue from selling space on the receipt for advertising purposes.

The radio amateur or broadcast listener pays a license of 24 marks annually, payable in twelve monthly instalments of 2 marks each. Total receipts of the German Government from the broadcasting service therefore amount to approximately 28,000,000 gold marks annually, of which 60 per cent., or 17,000,000 marks, are paid to the nine operating companies licensed by the German Government. The remainder is held by the Government and used for technical development and the building of new transmitting stations.

According to the latest public statistics about 1,200,000 radio receiving sets for which regular license fees are paid are in operation within Germany.

The Reiss marble block microphone is used almost exclusively in the German broadcasting studio. This patented device is a pulverized coal-dust microphone inclosed in a marble block, which is said to deaden undesirable oscillations and vibrations.

TRADE NEWS AND COMMENT

THE New York University Bureau of Business Research has just completed a survey of 209 radio dealers in New York to determine what manufacturers have the greatest distribution. The results revealed that Fada and Atwater-Kent tie for first place among sporting goods stores, each having 53 per cent. distribution. The Radio Corporation of America comes next with 47 per cent., Eagle next with 33 per cent. and Stromberg-Carlson has 20 per cent.

In electrical outlets Atwater-Kent is first with 49 per cent. and Fada second with 37 per cent.; then come Stromberg-Carlson with 29, Freshman with 26 and Freed-Eisemann with 23.

In auto supply stores Fada and Atwater-Kent tie for first place with 42 per cent. each in distribution in this type of outlet. Radio Corporation of America runs third. In hardware stores Atwater-Kent is the only manufacturer with heavy distribution. In radio stores Atwater-Kent runs 47 per cent. and Fada 37, with Freshman at 28 per cent. In music stores Atwater runs 66 per cent. and Fada 30 per cent., the investigation covering in this type only 49 stores.

According to the survey, the six manufacturers with leading distribution in the five boroughs of New York City are: Atwater-Kent, 56 per cent.; Fada, 36; Radio Corporation of America, 29; Freed-Eisemann, 21; Stromberg-Carlson, 17.

The investigation disclosed these six and two others with 11 per cent. distribution and 129 other brands. An interesting point was that some very well known sets had only between five and ten per cent. distribution in the New York market.

F. A. D. Andrea, Inc., has announced a specially built long wave neutrodyne receiver designed to receive both the normal 200 to 600 meter band and the 1,050 to 2,500 meter band.

The circuit is designed to tune in such stations as Daventry, England, 5XX, transmitting on 1,600 meters. The set was specifically designed for use in England and on the Continent. But the fact that many fans in this country would be also interested in such a model caused the manufacturer to build the unit so as to be available in limited quantities at this time for use in any of the Fada cabinets or art furniture model combinations.

The additional wave length band is secured by means of special wound inductances mounted over the standard neutroformers and with three small lever switches operated from the face of the panel, which permits instantaneous throw-over from the 200 to 600 meter band to the 1,050 to 2,500 meter band.

A MAN-SIZED JOB.

What a task faces the program manager of a broadcasting station, who must keep track of which copyright pieces of music may be played and which may not, may be judged when it is learned that no less than 21,850 musical compositions have been copyrighted in a little over a year.

The Trail of the Stromberg-Carlson

The radio signal after it enters the Stromberg-Carlson Receiver goes through the following stages of transformation:

1—First Stage of Radio Frequency Amplification.
2—Second Stage of Radio Frequency Amplification.
3—Third Stage of Radio Frequency Amplification.
4—Detector Stage.
5—First Stage of Audio Frequency Amplification.
6—Second Stage of Audio Frequency Amplification.

"Total Shielding" is the guardian of this radio signal as it passes through the various radio frequency stages. This shielding completely isolates each radio frequency circuit, thus permitting the use of the third stage without interstage coupling. This third stage adds not only 8 times more amplification to the detector, but approximately 50% more selectivity.

In the detector stage "Total Shielding" protects the program from any possible distortion due to feed-back from the second audio frequency stage. The audio frequency stages employ specially constructed transformers with an extra large core and a carefully worked out ratio between the primary and secondary windings, so that the musical range is extended to seven full octaves.

From the second audio frequency stage, the program, with magnificent volume and undistorted purity of tone over a full musical range enters the loud speaker.

MASS INTELLIGENCE CALLED HIGH ENOUGH

English Critic Sees Danger in Idea of Suddenly Raising Intellectual Level of Society—World Today Organized for Supremacy of the Few

THE author of the following article on he intelligence of the mass and of the few is a professor at Armstrong College, a branch of the University of Durham, in England.

By J. F. DUFF.

IT is a common complaint that the world has not got brains enough to deal with the complexities of modern life, and that man's development of machinery has outstripped the development of intelligence. Eugenic propaganda is directed to the betterment of brains no less than of bodies, and many serious students are warning us of the dangers of racial deterioration if we go on allowing indiscriminate reproduction regardless of fitness to reproduce.

Such complaints and such propaganda take it as their common assumption that to raise the level of intelligence all around would be a good thing. In the long run this must be true. Without following Socrates to the limit of believing that no one does wrong except from ignorance, it does seem obvious that with better brains mankind would be better able to discern and to pursue the True, the Beautiful and the Good, or any other goal that may be set up for the human race.

This is indeed so obvious that it may for once be more worth while to point out an opposite truth. If the dreams of eugenists came true, and from tomorrow all children were born with a degree of intelligence at least as high as the average of today, the world would find itself unprepared for the change, and the immediate result would not be greater happiness but the reverse.

Industrial System.

The trouble is that, for all our bewailing of the present lack of good intelligence, there is really little scope for intelligence, in the world as we know it today, for the ordinary man. The industrial system, much abused but indispensable for the universal comforts of modern life, must bear most of the blame for this. There is no need to credit the founders of industrialism with having seen so far ahead and with having planned accordingly, but the present system does in effect demand intelligence only from a few people at the top; from the subordinate mass quite other qualities are needed, especially diligence, regularity and power of doing the same thing endlessly without going mad.

For the fortunate few who are allowed to use their brains, any increase in intelligence will be pure gain. These are the people we have in mind when we clamor—and rightly clamor—for better brains to direct the course of things in general. The question whether the cleverest men do in fact occupy these leading positions is not to the point. Probably the truest answer would be that the cleverest can nearly always come to the top if they have an intense enough desire to do so. But this is by the way.

The real point is the small number of such positions where there is full scope for high intelligence. While this is so, and while a vast amount of unintelligent drudgery has to be performed by the great mass of mankind, it seems unreasonable to pray for a general rise in our mental capacity.

Putting Some Questions.

The tendency not to make full use of existing capacity can be seen working in England and, presumably, in other industrial countries, at the present time. There is only one person whose latent capacity each of us feels able to judge, namely, one's self.

Will readers kindly examine that one person and ask themselves some such questions as these: Which has more often led to my abandoning a proposed piece of work, lack of the requisite intelligence or sheer boredom and weariness of the flesh from monotony of toil? Or: Have I ever in the work that earns my living undergone the same intense mental effort that was needed for passing, say, my final examinations at college?

We may hope for some divergence of opinion in the answers, but the great majority of readers are likely to agree that normal life makes less demand on intelligence than it reasonably might, and that there is in most of us an unused reserve of mental power which is allowed to waste itself.

Yet the kind of person who reads this article is more favorably situated in this respect than is the kind of person who will never see it. The reader probably has more than average leisure, or he would not read it. If so, he will have less monotonous repetition—work and more scope for his intelligence than have most of his fellowmen. So that a similar inquiry addressed to the whole population ought to reveal a still greater degree of wasted intelligence.

A more objective view of the same wastage can be obtained by studying the results of higher education. In England, at any rate, the pupils of the secondary schools are a highly selected group—selected for intelligence. It is generally assumed that the selection is too rigid, and that we ought, if the country can afford it, to build more secondary schools and give more children a higher education. Certainly those best qualified to judge tell us that there are still many children capable of benefiting by higher education and yet unable to find places in the overcrowded secondary schools of today.

But out of this rigidly selected group it is painful to see how few are able to get suitable employment on leaving school. Suitable employment means, in this case, employment that will give scope for their higher intelligence and, within reasonably elastic limits, for the training that their higher education has given them. It is almost always a "black-coated" employment, and much of the criticism leveled against "black-coated" employment is beside the mark.

Education's Value.

All sensible people know that education has a value in itself apart from its value in the market; but modern secondary education has, and is bound to have in the modern world, a bias toward clerical or professional careers. These are the careers in which intelligence—with good fortune and after the lapse of years—may be allowed its full scope.

The appeal so often made to secondary school pupils that they should not regard their higher education as unfitting them for "work in their shirt-sleeves" is really an appeal to clever boys and girls to make no use of their cleverness. And to select and train clever children, and then to give them only unintelligent work to perform, is both a waste of public money and cruelty to the children themselves.

There is, however, a real charge against "black-coated" employments, and it is this: Although work that gives scope for good brains is on to be found in these employments, the converse is not true, and these employments do not guarantee worthy work for all the brains that they undoubtedly attract.

In particular the process of rising to responsibility is too slow, and the selection or responsible positions tends—perhaps inevitably—to be made on wrong grounds. The main quality needed for a leading position in which difficult problems must be solved is sheer intelligence; but the quality that distinguish a subordinate and make him catch the eye of the promoting power are quite different, as has already been said; and his reserve of intelligence is too often an unknown, untested, and it may be rusted, element.

It is hard to believe that twenty years or so of diligently carrying out instructions is a really satisfactory training for work that needs initiative and farsightedness in the highest degree. A pessimistic but very able critic recently said: "The main disease of British industry, from which it is economically dying, is excessive caution, not the best mental attribute in a changing age." The reasons for this fatal caution are not far to seek if the present argument is sound.

Division of Labor.

The root of the evil lies in the extent to which the division of labor has been carried. In the integration of a vast industrial machine, the brains must be only a small part of the whole. The great majority can be nothing more than the hands. It is no use quarreling with this fact. One can only strike a balance. In the one scale are the material benefits of civilization, not to be obtained, so far as can be seen, without our present large-scale industrial organization; in the other scale is the apparent failure to use the best ability of most men and the resulting degradation of humanity.

Which scale is the heavier can only be a matter of opinion. But it may be pointed out that a good deal of the present industrial discontent is due to this cause, even though the grievances may take another form on the surface. Here is a recurring demand for more "control by workers," or, in other words, the hands all want to be part of the brain. Unfortunately, while the normal industrial unit remains a very large unit, this seems an impossible demand. Failing this share in control, the demand tends to be for shorter hours. "If our work must be merely mechanical, at least we will not be machines all day and every day." It sounds reasonable enough.

If what has been said is true, there is a real and serious discordance between intelligence as operated upon by education on the one hand and the world's treatment of its educated intelligence on the other. To lessen this discordance will need a modification of one of the factors involved. These factors are three: innate intelligence, education and the organization of the working world. None can be affected by a sudden stroke, but all three can in the long run be affected by a general change of opinion as to what is desirable.

Any such alteration involves a rather formidable prospect and the situation is made worse by the different opinions as to what really is the desirable aim, according as the opinion is that of a eugenist, an educationist or a business man. All that can be done here is to take a rapid glance at the problem from these three points of view.

Problem of Better Brains.

If intelligence is the factor to be modified, we must cease to preach the eugenic doctrine that better brains will make a better world. With the recognition that much existing intelligence is wasted and that such waste causes great social discontent, a new war-cry will be required. "Breed for brawn, not for brain," suggests itself; though, of course, with the reservation that such a slogan is only for the masses and that the favored few will go on improving their intelligence as best they can!

But this is condemned as soon as uttered. For one thing, it divides humanity into two opposing armies, a ruling few and a slavish mass; and a study of the distribution of intelligence gives no grounds whatever for making such a hard-and-fast division. Or, again, on general principles. It can be taken as an axiom that the world will not be improved by an approach to the imbecile. We had better leave eugenists alone, to improve intelligence by wiser breeding—a task hard enough without fresh opposition.

Education is more open to attack than are the other two factors. It can be argued with a fair show of reason that the cause of our present discontents is not intelligence itself, but educated, or half-educated, intelligence. If so, it is not educational aims or methods that are being criticized, but the actual fact of general compulsory education.

A sweeping condemnation of this kind is easier to contradict than to disprove, and two remarks must suffice: First, it is too late to go back without disaster, and since universal education is here we must make the best of it; second, if intelligence is better than feeble-mindedness, it is no less axiomatic that knowledge is better than ignorance. On these fundamentals no educationist can yield.

The question of aims and methods is more controversial, but higher education, as already stated, is doing its best to adapt itself to the probable future needs of its pupils. Further in this direction it can hardly go, without the risk of ceasing to be what it calls itself—higher education. Primary education, which is still for most boys and girls both the beginning and the end of their schooling, is on more shaky ground. It has hardly faced the fact that nowadays the cream of its pupils is skimmed off for the secondary school, and that the pupils for whom the primary school is also the educational terminus are not in the first ranks of intelligence. For such pupils modern primary education is almost certainly too bookish.

But the right correction of this tendency does not lie in vocational training, for there is no vocation worthy of the name awaiting most of these pupils.

You cannot train a boy for years to become a biscuit-packer, a tram-conductor, or a stevedore. Training is required not for these occupations, but against the evils they are likely to engender. Not book-learning nor bookkeeping, with a faint elusive shadow of a black coat on the dim horizon, but something practical, making demands on hand and eye and energy of body and suggesting some worthy employment of leisure later on, is the right ideal for these.

Call it character training if you will, but remember that character can only be trained through some definite means. It is impossible to frame your time-table so that arithmetic will be taught from 11 o'clock till 11:30 and character from 11:30 till 12. This applies to all whose work cannot be considered a vocation, a majority under modern conditions.

Realm of Agriculture.

Where the work is not so mechanical, the school can help to prepare for it. An outstanding example is agriculture. The despised agricultural laborer is more of a man and less of a machine than is the case with most industrial workers; and it is peculiarly unfortunate that external economic causes have kept him poorly paid, while the spurious glamour of the cities has deprived the industry of much of its brightest intelligence. Today, when it has become easy to visit the town, though one live on a farm, rural schools might be doing more than they are to make life on the land attractive even to boys of good mental capacity. But agriculture, where the hands are all the better for a share of brains too, and where the unit of production—i. e., farm or holding, is not overwhelmingly large—holds an exceptional place. The trend of most industries of today is quite different.

Education, then, it is suggested, can modify itself in some ways to bring about a fuller harmony between school and the world beyond its walls. But most of these suggestions are not for preventing the waste of intelligence while at work, but for giving scope for intelligence outside work in leisure hours. Our main quest, to find scope for intelligence in the everyday work of the world, is still unachieved. And it now rests with the third of our three factors, the organization of industry, to modify itself in order to achieve this task.

Somewhere there is room for a reconstruction of the business world by properly qualified persons with a taste for devising Utopias. Somewhere, but not here.

DISABLED WIN NEW LIVELIHOOD THROUGH HANDCRAFT WORK

Organization to Assist Crippled Soldiers Has Extended Its Activities

TONY CARMINETTI he may be called. He is now a landed proprietor in Italy, so his identity is concealed. Not long ago he bought a farm in his native country with money earned in New York in less than two years.

Not much of a feat perhaps in a city where millionaires are frequent. But four years ago Tony Carminetti was listed by the United States Veterans' Bureau as a "problem case." From the standpoint of rehabilitation experts he was almost useless, economically speaking. At that point he was taken on by the Associated Handcraft Industries. Files of the industries' offices at 30 West Fifteenth Street reveal baldly his subsequent history.

Tony had six months' education in Italy before coming to America. He worked as section hand on a railroad, as carpenter's helper, as farmhand and as knitting millhand. He went to France as a private in the Fifty first Regiment of the Twenty-eighth Division, and was wounded at Chateau Thierry by machine-gun fire. The net result was an amputated right hand and shattered nerves when he was thirty years old.

In May, 1920, Tony began training with the United States Veterans' Bureau. He studied elementary English for fourteen months, building inspection for nine months and welding for eight months. And at the end he was no nearer earning his living than he had been.

In November, 1922, he was admitted to the Dover Farms School, the first enterprise of the Associated Handcraft Industries. It is the root from which have sprung several new branches of this unique business organization. For little more than a year Tony trained there, learning handloom weaving and earning while he learned. But, since he was paid by the piece and since all his production was scrutinized by an official with an eye on eventual public sales, Tony had to make himself worth every cent he received. Nevertheless, late last year Tony returned to Italy and bought himself a farm with what he had saved.

Former Officers Began It.

Run in conjunction with the United States Government and other bodies engaged in rehabilitation work, the Associated Handcraft Industries is, however, a private philanthropy, organized by a group of former officers. They acknowledge that the idea for it was born in France, when its backers were fighting side by side in the A. E. F. They say it is simply based on the belief that what disabled men need is a large-scale enterprise, whose methods are adapted to individual handicaps. They hold that rehabilitation, to be effective, must be both remunerative and congenial, and that its success is measured by the steadiness and size of the weekly pay envelope.

The aim of the group at first was to aid war casualties alone. Gradually, however, the scope was extended to take in the casualties of peace. No discrimination was made as to race, creed or color. Now even the barrier of sex has been broken down.

Every cent of salaries has to be earned, for the Associated Handcraft Industries is run on business lines. Its money is derived simply from the sales of its products, and it pays no man who is not worth his keep.

First there was the Dover Farms School and Industries, which consisted mainly in the manufacture of toys. Next came the handloom weaving which is believed to be the largest business of its kind in America, twelve of its looms being for one-armed men. Here at first simple scarfs were made with a wide range of color. Then began the weaving of baby blankets, couch covers, table runners and finally dress materials. Now these materials are being used by a Paris designer for Spring sport frocks.

Work Still Expanding.

After the handloom weaving came the handwrought metal workshop. Now are being added the manufacture of educational and play materials, and the Woodwork Department.

Thirty disabled men and several disabled women are at present working in the shops and showrooms of the handcraft industries in Fifteenth Street.

"But that number," says Warner S. Sterling, director, "is only a drop in the ocean of the employment need. Our waiting list is long and daily growing longer, but our force must be measured strictly by the demand for our production. The greater the sales the more disabled people we can absorb.

"There are hundreds of disabled people now out of work, many of them men with families to support, who could make themselves economically independent, were we in a position to add them to our payroll. For them we solicit not the sympathy, not the money, of the public but just their inspection of our products. We do not ask them to buy because the work is turned out by the disabled, but because it is the best work of its kind to be found in the country."

With a view, then, to increasing the opportunities for the steadily growing army of the handicapped, the associated industries propose now to enlist the public interest in the expansion of their sales. The first step in this direction is the opening of the showroom at 30 West Fifteenth Street, to which the general public is invited for purposes of inspection. Here can be seen the products of the employees.

The Advisory Board of the Associated Handcrafts Institutes includes Lucien S. Breckinridge, Snowden A. Fahnestock, Deacon Murphy, Hoffman Nickerson, Warner S. Sterling, Erastus T. Tefft and Henry D. Walbridge.

The Progress of 119 Years

In 1807 Robert Fulton built the first steamboat to navigate the Hudson, the Clermont. To-day the great ships Leviathan, Majestic and Berengaria, three hundred times the size of the Clermont, steam past the Statue of Liberty, marking a century of marvelous progress.

In 1807, when the Clermont amazed all New York by paddling its deliberate way to Albany, John Knox Cowperthwait opened his little chair shop at Chatham Square. He established at once the sound principle of selling attractive, substantial furniture "on most reasonable and accommodating terms," so that everyone could afford the very best.

In all the 119 years since then, the business he founded has grown and kept pace with the marvelous progress of the century, because his descendants have conducted it on this same sound principle. The present members of the firm, all Cowperthwaits, will continue this policy.

You can be certain, therefore, that you are securing goods of excellent quality, and you will be surprised at the low prices with which they are marked at Cowperthwait's. You may easily furnish an entire home, or get only a few things on a simple budget charge account, with convenient weekly or monthly payments distributed over a period of 80 weeks, or 20 months.

By HARRY CROSS.

The Yankees came back to their spacious stadium yesterday to show the home folks how they have been thumping the Robins all over Dixieland. They showed more than 10,000 of them how they did it. Without resorting to any fence breaking, Huggins's rejuvenated troupe of tourists knocked the Brooklyns off for their eleventh straight defeat. The score was 4 to 1.

The Brooklyn pitchers at last stopped Mark Koenig, after hitting safely this Spring in eighteen exhibition games. Messrs. Grimes and Petty, the Brooklyn tossers, made Mark go hitless.

Not so with Lou Gehrig, the Teuton oak, however. Lou had a perfect day at the bat, with a percentage of 1.000. He walked once, made two singles and his third wallop was a three-bagger to left. After this rap he proceeded to score the Yanks' fourth run when he counted while Ruth was being tossed out at first.

Koenig and Lazzeri Applauded.

The crowd was eager to see the Yank club, which had so suddenly come to life this Spring. They had rounds of applause for Koenig and Lazzeri, the two new members of the club who have been burning up all the ball parks in the sticks. Lazzeri obliged with two singles and got one pass in three times up. Bob Meusel got a rest and Nick Cullop played left, but did nothing.

Yes, and there was high cheering and commotion for Babe Ruth, although the best that Babe got at the bat was two passes. In the field, however, Ruth twinkled brightly and made a gallant catch when he galloped far to grab Cox's wicked drive in the fourth.

Grimes, who pitched five innings for the Robins, was forever in a hole, and he was lucky to come out as well as he did. Three times the bases were jammed full with Yankee runners, but these tense moments were not relieved by heavy Yankee bombardment, as has been the case in the other ten defeats the Robins have tasted.

Although the Yanks were outhit, they were not at all dismayed at such a novel state of affairs. In fact they showed considerable aggressiveness, and although their work was not so smooth as it has been they were always playing to win. Gus Felix was the batting star for the Robins with a triple, a double and single.

Shocker allowed only two hits in four innings, and while Pennock was touched up merrily at times, he was effective in the pinches.

Grimes in Hole at Start.

Grimes got out of a peck of trouble in the first with the penalty of a single run. Koenig walked and Combs rolled out to Fournier. Gehrig's sharp single to centre sent Koenig home. The crowd was disappointed when Ruth walked. Cullop lifted a high fly to Marriott and Lazzeri ambled to fill the bases. With Joe Dugan at the bat and with trouble in his eye, Jacques Fournier edged into the scene and saved Grimes from dire embarrassment.

Dugan cracked a liner far to the right side of Fournier and Jacques moved more briskly than he had all Spring and nipped the ball with his bare hand, a nifty clutch.

A foul tip from Stock's bat injured Pat Collins's right hand, and after the inning he had to quit the game, Spencer Adams going in to bat for him at the start of the second. The Salt Lake City Sheriff walked and Shocker got a hit when Fournier tried hard to scoop up his tap along the first-base line.

Koenig forced Adams at third and Combs hoisted to Witt. Gehrig walked and crowded the bases again. Once more Grimes was yanked out of a deep hole when Ruth shot a hot grounder to Stock, who chucked Babe out at first.

Bengough took Collins's place behind the bat for the Yanks. Benny is faster than ever and celebrated his entrance into the game with a fine play when he backed up first base and retrieved an overthrow by Lazzeri.

Gehrig opened the fifth with a single to left and Ruth walked again. After Cullop forced Gehrig at third, Lazzeri punched a long single, which bounded off the front of the right field bleachers. Ruth and Cullop overran third and second, but they managed to get back.

With the bases filled, Dugan cracked a single to short left, scoring Ruth. When Wheat fumbled the ball Cullop also raced over. Bengough ended the session by hitting into a double play.

With two gone in the Robins' section of the sixth, Fournier singled to right and Cox sent him to second with a safe crack to the same locality. Standaert, one of Uncle Robbie's Rookies, batting in place of Marriott, WASHINGTO N, D. C., April 10.—The Giants s nothered the Senators with class this afternoon and tied the Spring series up in a new bowknot. Each team no w owns four victories and the big t tle hinges on the outcome of a sing e game tomorrow. The score today wa 8 to 1, which is plenty.

Imagine the consternation of 5,000 Washington en thusiasts, out to welcome the boys back home, when the Giants assault d Sir Walter Johnson for five runs n three innings. The New Yorkers attacked the beloved Walter from all sides and sectors, and Big Barney reta eated at the end of the third with his f eelings injured and his right hand also slightly battered.

A blazing gro under from the bat of Billy Southworth clipped Washington's Big Train in th third and forced him to run up a sid ing. Johnson was not seriously maime d and undoubtedly will be able to pitch the first game Tuesday, if he has to, but Bucky Harris took no chanc e today anr relieved him in favor of Stanley Coveleskie.

Johnson Is Ineffective.

Johnson was ineffective, anyhow, and had nothing th t looked mysterious to the Giants. Th ey made seven of their ten hits whi e he was presiding. Coveleskie wa s troublesome, but a youngster ra med Irving Hadley yielded three ore runs in the ninth.

This brings a s to the matter of Virgil Barnes and frederick Fitzsimmons, who shed m ch joy and gladness by throttling the Senators in their tracks. Barnes, who is likely to toss the opening game Tu sday, went seven innings today, and c ver this prolonged stretch held the Sen stors to five safeties. Fitzsimmons was not as good as this, but they could n't score on him.

It was a sp rightly game and brilliantly played, but the crowd was crueelly disappoint ing because of its smallness. Either Washington has soured on its erstwh le world's champions or else the Capit l fans don't own Spring overcoats.

The Giants started things with two out in the firs t inning. Young walked and stole, an l when Southworth singled to centre our boys were in possession of a run.

Tyson Gets Triple.

The second round was also productive, when T yson boomed a triple to the fence in l eft centre and scored on Jackson's sa rifice fly. In the selfsame inning the Senators curried Mr. Barnes for a run. Judge, after doubling to centre was nailed at third on Bluege's grou der to Jackson. Peckinpaugh and Ruel produced singles that scored Bl uege, but Barnes stopped the nonsense.

MAJOR LEAGUES OPEN SEASON THIS WEEK

Campaign Will Get Under Way in Eight Cities Tuesday—Keen Races Expected.

GIANTS FACE ROBINS HERE

Mayor Walker to Toss First Ball at Polo Grounds—Yanks to Start in Boston.

By RICHARDS VIDMER.

The opening of another baseball season is almost at hand. On Tuesday of this week sixteen major league clubs, representing millions of dollars in players and property, will swing into the long campaign that leads through a pace-setting Spring, when adjustments are made midst jostling for an early lead; a grinding Summer, which forces those teams unable to travel at high speed to find their level at the bottom of the heap, and into early Fall and the final drive for the pennants of victory, the fame of a world's series and a bag of money for the triumphant.

New York and Brooklyn fans are expected to fill the Polo Grounds to capacity to witness the inaugural clash in the National League between the Giants and the Robins, before a background that is old, yet somehow always new. Mayor James J. Walker will be the guest of honor and will hurl the first ball to the Giant pitcher, officially opening the season. Previous to that the members of the two clubs will gather at the home plate and march in wavering lines to the centre field flagpole to the strains of martial music. There Old Glory will be raised to the breeze, the players will return to their dugouts, Mayor Walker will hold the spotlight for one little moment, and then the glare of interest will swing to the game itself and stay there until another season ends with the world's series in October.

Much the same sort of thing will be going on simultaneously in seven other cities scattered through the East and Middle West. In the National League the champion Pirates open at St. Louis, the Chicago Cubs open at Cincinnati and the Boston Braves make their début at Philadelphia.

Yanks Will Open in Boston.

Inaugural day in the American League will find the Yankees at Boston, St. Louis at Chicago, Cleveland at Detroit and Philadelphia at Washington, where the favored Athletics and the title-defending Senators will be compared early.

Besides Mayor Walker there will be a gathering of other notables, representing varied walks of life, as the guests of the Giants. Among them will be Governor Harry Moore of New Jersey, Mayor Hague of Jersey City, Major Gen. Merch B. Stewart, Superintendent of the United States Military Academy, and John A. Heydler, President of the National League.

These distinguished persons will be in the boxes and there will be others in the grandstands behind them, but none of them will hold the attention of the public on that day as will Jimmy Ring and Dazzy Vance, who will take the mound as rival pitchers.

Frank Frisch, the scintillating field captain of the Giants; Jacques Fournier, the ponderous first baseman and powerful hitter of the Robins; "Long George" Kelly and Zack Wheat, veteran favorites of rival clubs; Al Tyson and Johnny Butler, two newcomers breaking into the major leagues for the first time; these and other athletes will be the ones to hold the interest of the throng.

Next week, on Wednesday, April 21, the Yankees will make their first home

McGraw Ready for Hard Pennant Fight; Huggins Confident, Robinson Optimistic

Although all three decline to make any predictions, confidence that their respective teams can be counted upon to develop into strong factors in the coming major league pennant races is reflected in the statements made yesterday for THE NEW YORK TIMES by John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants; Miller Huggins, manager of the New York Yankees, and Wilbert Robinson, manager of the Brooklyn Robins. Their statements follow:

McGRAW—The man who attempts to predict the fortunes and misfortunes of a pennant race, with accidents likely to crop up over a stretch of 154 games, is not a prophet. He is an idiot. So I am not going to break my invariable rule this Spring. But I will say this: The Giants this Spring look stronger than the Giants last Spring. The pitching staff is the best I have had in many years. I still rate the Cardinals as a dangerous team. The Pirates are the same as last year. Batting punch is their greatest asset. The National League is stronger than it was a year ago. Teams like Boston and Philadelphia have been steadily improved. It will be a tough race and the breaks as usual will tell most of the story.

HUGGINS—I have a strong ball club and one in which I have much confidence. I am not going to make any predictions about the outcome of the pennant race this year, because I do not wish to burden my players or myself with an advance estimate of what we expect to do. My infield is strong, and if it comes up to my estimation, which I think it will, I will have a club which will be sure to bother the strongest the league has to offer.

I have confidence that the defensive strength of the club and the attack will measure up with the very best. With these two assets, our position in the race will depend on the pitching staff. I have nothing to worry about the regular pitchers, for they will win many ball games. With the disposition of the players what it should be, I am satisfied with our present outlook.

ROBINSON—While my club this year is not as strong as I would like to see it, I feel that before the season is very old it will be a much better organization than it has shown to be this Spring. We have been handicapped in the infield, but I will have a stronger defense there when I work out some of the plans I now have in mind.

I know my pitching staff to be a good one, and I do not doubt that the pitchers will carry their share of the work when the season gets under way.

We have sufficient batting strength to hold us up in the coming race, for at no time during the training season have the players shown their real hitting power. My club has not yet shown its real strength and should not be judged by its early season games.

First Half-Dozen Tallies Made on Four Passes, Hit Batsman, Two Errors and One Safe Hit.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 10.—Timing their hitting to better advantage and playing a strong game in the field, Fordham won from the Naval Academy in today's baseball game by 14 to 1.

The wildness of Myers, who started pitching for the Navy, was also a factor. Zabilski replaced him in the first inning and lasted until the fifth, when he retired after a Fordham bombardment. Graf, a left-hander, pitched a good game to the close, the visitors did not hit him safely during the last four innings.

Fordham made its runs in two bunches of six each in the first and the fifth innings, and got two extra in the second.

Get Six Runs at Outset.

Sheflot's single was the only safe blow in the first inning but four passes, a hit batsman and errors by Cooper and Ward were enough to pile up a half dozen tallies. In the second two runs were scored on singles by Clancy and Cobb, a pass to Sheflot and stolen bases by the latter and Clancy.

Landry, Worner and Carter hit safely in the fifth and Clancy doubled, the only extra base-hit of the game. This hitting with a pass to White and errors by Hamilton and Schwab gave Fordham its final batch of runs as its batsmen did little against Graf.

Navy Tallies in the Third.

The Navy scored its only run in the third inning, when Ward hit safely, stole second and reached home on Hamilton's single past second.

Harrington, who pitched eight innings for the visitors, was hit with fair

HARVARD NINE DROPS ITS FIRST GAME; 8-6

Boston University Scores Three Runs in Eighth and Clinches the Contest.

CRIMSON AHEAD IN THIRD

Fills Bases to No Avail in Fifth and Victors Again Take Lead in Seventh.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 10.—Boston University defeated the Harvard nine, 8 to 6, today in the Crimson's opening game of the season. Barbee allowed the Terriers only four hits and passed only eight men in eight innings, but was poorly supported. McDonald was just as effective as Barbee, but was backed up in the pinches. It was O'Brien's triple in the eighth that put the game away.

In the first inning, after two were out, B. U. scored two runs, Todd muffing Higginbotham's fly, Mouldon being passed and Jenkins getting a double to left. Harvard then scored on two passes and two outs at first.

In the second the Crimson tied the score, Sullivan getting a pass, going to third on De Rham's single and a wild throw by O'Brien. B. U. went ahead, 3 to 2, in the third when Higginbotham made the rounds on a pass, a stolen base and Moulton's line single to centre, but in the same inning Harvard scored twice and went ahead for the first time. Zarakov walked, Todd singled and both crossed the plate on Ullman's two-bagger to deep right field.

There was no more scoring until the seventh, although Harvard had the bases filled in the fifth. In the seventh K. McDonald singled for B. U. O'Brien scratched a hit to Lord and D. McDonald sacrificed. Then Ling singled to left, sending K. McDonald home and Boston again was in the lead.

In the eighth Todd's fine catch in deep left field robbed Jenkins of a

COLUMBIA HUMBLED BY N. Y. U. NINE, 8-2

Art Smith Fails to Puzzle Violet Batters, Who Sting Him for Eight Hits.

MADISON GETS HOME RUN

Drive With One On in Sixth Follows Scoring of Six Runs in First Two Innings.

New York University tamed the Columbia lion on Ohio Field yesterday afternoon. The members of the Violet baseball team defeated the Blue and White, which already has beaten four opponents this Spring, by a score of 8 to 2. Four thousand persons saw the performance. It was the thirtieth baseball game between New York University and Columbia, and was won by the Violet through concentrating five hits in two innings and playing scintillating baseball on the defense.

New York University made three runs each in the first and second innings and then two more in the sixth, when a home run sailed over the right field fence with one man aboard the bags. To make matters bluer for the Blue and White supporters, N. Y. U. scored eight hits and its eight runs off Art Smith, the heretofore invincible Columbia hurler. The Violet batters got as many hits off Smith in the first two innings yesterday as he allowed in his previous two games. That was exactly five.

Corbin and Brooks pitched for N. Y. U. and allowed eight hits also. Corbin pitched four and two-thirds innings and allowed seven, Brooks four and one-third innings and allowed only one safety in the face of a determined Columbia rally. Splendid N. Y. U. fielding, punctuated by three double plays, and some loose playing by Columbia, balanced the scales in favor of the Violet, even though the number of hits scored by each team was the same.

Violet Gets Flying Start.

The kind of fight N. Y. U. was going to put up against Columbia was apparent in the opening minutes of the game. The first N. Y. U. double play retired the Columbia side after one was out, and then the Violet batters began to batter Smith.

Madison, who later banged out the home run, stepped to the plate and promptly smacked out a double. A splendid bunt by Francis, intended as a sacrifice, put that player on first and advanced Madison to third. Kunitz, the Columbia catcher, then allowed a fast one to get by him and Madison scored; thereupon Smith walked Ingram. Davis smacked a short blow through the infield, which enabled Trentacosti to nail Francis as he came down to third. Davis, however, was safe at first on the play.

Smith then walked Lincoln. With the bases full, Smith made a wild pitch and Ingram scored. Smith also walked Watson. The bases were again full and only one was out. Stewart lifted a high sacrifice fly and Davis scampered across the plate with the third run. The N. Y. U. total in the inning might have been greater had not Lincoln, who was on second, forgotten to run down to third. He was forced by Watson and caught by Trentacosti between second and third when he finally started to run. It was the third out.

Columbia got back one of the runs in the beginning of the second when Smith hit a double to centre field. Incidentally, Smith got three hits in four times up. Two of his hits were doubles. Norris then singled, scoring Smith. Trentacosti got a base on balls. With things looking a little bad for Corbin, two men on base and none out, N. Y. U. turned in its second double play, with Corbin the keystone 19-Year-Old Golfer Beats Sherrill of Tampa, 2 and 1, in Final of Amateur Tourney.

FOUR UP IN THE MORNING

Loser Overplays Many of His Second Shots—Hufty 7 Up at One Stage of Match.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 10.—Page Hufty of Washington, D. C., who is only 18 years old, won the North and South amateur golf championship here today when he defeated Lawrence Sherrill of Tampa by 2 and 1. Hufty stood 4 up at the end of the morning round, which he had played in 76, against an 81 by his opponent.

Starting the afternoon round, the match tightened up and the Floridian appeared to be a little steadier. After halving two holes he won the third hole. Both were in the rough on their drives, scarcely six feet apart. Sherrill was short in his approach. Hufty overplayed the green, while his opponent put the ball on the sand and won the hole with a 5.

Hufty then settled down to business and took the dog-leg fifth by playing to the sand in 2 while the Florida golfer's ball went sailing over the green. All day Sherrill had been too strong with his second shots. At the sixth hole Sherrill played one of his fine brassie shots of 220 yards, but this time it was too strong and went over the green, causing him to lose this hole also.

Hufty Piles Up a Lead.

Hufty won the short twenty-fifth with a 3, Sherrill giving him an opening by missing a six-foot putt. At the twenty-sixth hole Sherrill, trying to pitch over the trap guarding the green, flubbed the shot. The ball lodged in the trap. Hufty ran an approach shot up to the lip of the cup for an easy 5.

After this hole Hufty was 7 up. Then he lost the twenty-seventh as Sherrill got a birdie 3. Hufty was out in 38, while Sherrill required 40.

The twenty-eighth hole was a weird exhibition. Hufty visited three traps while Sherrill, with a 300-yard drive, the longest ever seen on this hole, found a bad lie and topped his second into the trap. From here he went over a green into a bunker and dropped another stroke trying to get out. Both tooks 7s.

Sherrill registered another birdie 3 on the eleventh or twenty-ninth hole. Hufty had a par 4. The Washington player was in trouble with his tee shot on the twelfth or thirtieth hole. The Tampa player took this hole 4 to 5.

Both got one over par at the thirty-first. Sherrill as usual overplayed the green. Hufty missed a putt to half the thirty-second after making a beautiful recovery from a trap. Sherrill got a fine birdie 4. Sherrill had another birdie 4 on the sixteenth hole, by concession, however, as Hufty had missed two putts, thus picking up and conceding the hole.

Hufty Ends the Match.

The match ended on the thirty-fifth green. Sherrill looked hopeless here as he put his ball in the trap. Hufty had a 3 and the best the Florida golfer could do was to get a half, which he did, leaving him 2 down and 1 to play.

OPPERMAN CAPTURES THE PRINCE GEORGES

REPARATION BREAKS DOWN

Favorite Falters Badly in Stretch Drive—Cudgelier Takes the Show Money.

ANOTHER TO H. P. WHITNEY

Turner Thrills Crowd by Rushing Miniator Up to Nip Best Friend —Timmara a Winner.

By HENRY E. ILSLEY.

Special to The New York Times.

BOWIE, Md., April 10.—Coming from well back in the stretch drive, Frank M. Kelly's aged gelding Opperman this afternoon carried off the money in the Prince Georges Handicap, which was the leading number on the card at Prince Georges Park. Claimed by Kelly out of his last race, the bay son of Pataud and Dancing Wave earned his new owner $3,360.

Opperman was a rank outsider in the betting, paying $49.20 for each $2 in the mutuels. J. McTaggart had the leg up and Opperman, carrying 109 pounds, ran the mile and a sixteenth in 1:49 2-5 over a fast track.

The largest attendance of the meeting was drawn to the course, tempted by a cloudless sky and balmy Spring breezes. Baltimore, Washington and New York contributed large numbers to the throng of 16,000 crowding grand stand and clubhouse and overflowing onto the lawns. The racing course had dried out nicely and fast times were recorded.

Reparation the Choice.

J. E. Davis's Reparation was made the pronounced favorite for the Prince Georges Handicap. He was running well and Maiben had just called on him in the stretch drive when he broke down in bad shape. Opperman got off slowly and McTaggart did not move up with him until the stretch run. Then he came on with a fine burst of speed and won by half a length from J. L. Burtis-hell's Lounger, the second choice.

H. G. Bedwell's Cudgeller made the early pace, with Reparation and Lounger in close attendance. When Reparation broke down Lounger held on and was able to claim second money by the margin of his nose from Cudgeller, J. H. Buscher's Golden Mac taking fourth money.

Score one more for the Harry Payne Whitney juveniles. The blue and brown silks came home in front in the opening four furlongs dash. Miniator and Clarence Turner, a combination that sent the stands into an uproar with the brilliancy of their only previous start here were backed heavily and Miniator closed at a little better than even money, paying $4.50 to $2.

Seven in the Aspirant.

The race was the Aspirant Purse and seven went to the post, with A. F. Reinhardt's Best Friend the second choice. The latter broke into the lead and looked an easy winner on the turn.

The Whitney geldings were nowhere in the early running, but on the turn into the home stretch Turner began to ask Miniator for speed. The Pennant gelding, however, came very wide and didn't appear to have a chance.

In the drive home, however, Miniator developed an electrifying burst in the middle of the track, climbed right over the others and Turner lifted him over the line a winner by a nose over Best Friend. McAtee was unable to get any speed out of Capricorn, which was not a contender.

Miniator ran within a fifth of a second of the track record, covering the half mile in 0:48. It was a startling juvenile performance.

Timmara Romps Home.

Timmara came up to the expectations of his supporters for the Preakness and Kentucky Derby when he romped home in front of the field of six that went to the post in the race for the Expectation Purse, a dash of five and a half furlongs restricted to the three-year-olds. "Chicago" O'Brien's upstanding son of Westy Hogan and Plureen was the almost prohibitive favorite, paying only $2.60 in the machines.

There was little to the event except the nice race run by Samuel Ross's Cinema, which cut out the early pace and held on to take the place back of the favorite.

Harvey broke Timmara from the extreme outside post position and waited until the far turn. There he called on the big bay colt and he came around the rest of them with ease, although forced to go extremely wide on the turn for home. At the finish he was going easily to win by a length and a half and hadn't taken a long breath.

Welshot took third money. Timmara took up top weight of 112 pounds and ran the race in 1:07 flat, only three-fifths of a second slower than the track record.

Purse for Johnny Campbell.

Johnny Campbell, J. Rotunno's four-year-old son of Assagai and Midge, upset the form when he showed the way home in the dash of six and a half furlongs out of the chute, seven others trailing him to the wire. Those who fancied the gelding's chances drew down $34.70 for each $2.

Johnny Maiben rode a good race on the winner, following the pace and coming strongly at the end to win with something to spare.

Joella J. was the hot tip and took down the second money. Columbia II set the early pace, but quit completely at the head of the stretch when challenged, and was not in the picture at the finish. The race was run in 1:20 2-5. J. D. Wilson's Fair Play gelding, Eager, well played, was almost left at the post and Froggatie did not punish the gelding.

Report That Jennings Is Critically Ill Denied by McGraw After Visit to Him

M'GRAW MINIMIZES JENNINGS'S ILLNESS

Denies That Giants' Aid Has Tuberculosis or That His Condition Is Serious.

WILL BE OUT ON MAY 1

Manager Declares Injustice Has Been Done by Reports From Asheville of Critical Ailment.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 10.—A flat denial that Hughey Jennings is suffering from tuberculosis or is even seriously ill was issued today by John J. McGraw as he rejoined the Giants after a trip to see Jennings in an Asheville sanitarium.

"I can't understand how such a report gained any foothold," said McGraw. "An injustice has been done Jennings to circulate such rumors, and I fail to see how the newspaper correspondents at Asheville could send out a report like that without getting to the bottom of the matter, as anybody easily could have done.

"It also was said that the sanitarium in which Hughey is confined takes only tubercular patients. This is untrue. I found out for myself that there are several patients there in the same category with Jennings.

"The truth is that Jennings had a breakdown, following a complication of illnesses, including influenza and ulceration of four teeth. He stopped at Asheville for a rest, has gained ten pounds and expects to be out May 1. Yet the day before I arrived at Asheville the report was published that he was critically ill. Is a man critically ill when he sits up and talks to a caller for an hour and a half?

"Hughey is making so much progress that his doctor comes to see him only about once a week. I don't know when he will be back with the Giants, but I told him emphatically that he must not come back until he is completely recovered. His own health comes first."

HAVERFORD SHUTS OUT STEVENS TECH, 6 TO 0

Engineers Use Three Pitchers in Vain Effort to Check Quaker Nine Batsmen.

Stevens Tech opened its baseball season at Hoboken yesterday, losing to Haverford by a 6-0 score. The Engineers played a ragged game. Three pitchers were used in an effort to halt the Haverford nine.

Surbeck did well during the early innings but his support failed in the fourth and fifth, and four runs crossed the plate. Logan was the strongest factor in the visitors' scoring, but was closely followed by Richter.

PENN CLOUTS BALL TO BEAT ARMY, 8-3

Makes Timely Safeties and Takes Advantage of Weak Support Accorded Zimmerman.

LONG IN EXCELLENT FORM

Holds the Cadets Hitless and Runless for Seven Innings on West Point Diamond.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., April 10.—Long, the University of Pennsylvania pitcher, held the West Point Cadets hitless and runless for seven innings today, and only showed signs of weakening after his mates suddenly weakened in their support. Penn won, however, 8 to 3. Ideal weather prevailed and a good sized crowd saw the game.

Penn's first run came on Field's triple, which was followed by Hummell's smash past second. Penn scored next in the sixth. Fields drew a pass as Zimmerman showed signs of distress. A sacrifice and a safe drive followed, these being sufficient to score Fields.

In the seventh Zimmerman again wavered, a hit and a pass put two runners on. Cole drove one to deep left, which Nave muffed, both Penn runners scoring on the error. Cole went all the way to third and also scored when Heiser muffed a throw to the plate.

In the final inning Thomas walked for Penn, and Cole beat out a bunt. Although Fields fanned, Thomas and Cole executed a double steal. Hummell drove one at Schepps, who made a perfect throw home. Heiser again dropped the ball and both Thomas and Cole counted.

The Cadets tallied twice in the eighth. Nave got West Point's first hit, a scratch infield grounder. Shepard lined one over Cole's head and Heiser singled to right, scoring Nave. Bell, a pinch hitter, failed and a moment later Cole missed fire on a drive by Schepps and Heiser scored.

In their half of the ninth the Cadets scored again, Penn's infield lapsing long enough for an Army man to get through.

Roosma's fielding in centre was noteworthy as a feature of Army's plays, while for Penn Hummell's defensive work stood out.

Pummel Ruffing as Boston City Clash Ends With Each Team Holding One Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 10.—The Braves jumped on big Charlie Ruffing in the early innings of the city series wind-up today, and thereby earned an even break, each club having won one game. The Braves beat the Sox today, 5 to 3, taking the lead in the third round and remaining in front all the way.

Johnny Wertz made his local debut for the Braves, and after a rocky first inning looked like a champion. The American Leaguers nicked him for two runs in the opener, but could not touch him in the five following innings.

Southpaw George Mogridge finished for the winners and was saved a couple of times by excellent support.

glove. When Frisch knocked a double to left centre Freddy was seen chasing plateward.

Young's short single to left moved Frisch to third and Southworth's single off Johnson's bare hand scored Frank. Time was taken out while Walter inspected his mitt to see if he still had five digits. He had, but they weren't in perfect working order. Kelly struck out but Tyson beat out a tap to Judge, Young scoring.

The Giants scored three runs in the ninth off Young Hadley just to make it unanimous.

The Senators came out all dolled up in pretty new uniforms of light gray with stockings of a darker hue. On either sleeve was a red, white and blue shield. Nick Altrock looked perfectly killing.

O'Brien followed with a triple to right centre, coming all the way around on Ujlman's fumble of the return from the field. A pass to Lawless and hits by Higginbotham and Jenkins added a run in the Terriers' count in the ninth. Harvard hit in two runs in the ninth.

SWARTHMORE WINS IN 10TH.

Rallies in Closing Innings to Down Drexel Institute, 11-10.

Special to The New York Times.

SWARTHMORE, Pa., April 10.—The Swarthmore College nine won its first game of the season by defeating Drexel Institute today in a ten-inning game, 11 to 10, before a record crowd on the Alumni Field.

It required the services of four pitchers to stem the Garnet rally in the closing innings. Drexel made fifteen hits, Swarthmore twenty.

appearance of the season and the ceremonies will be repeated. Mayor Walker again will toss out the first ball, another parade will be staged and the Yankee Stadium probably will be filled to capacity when the reconstructed Yanks go into action against the Boston Red Sox.

The Robins will have two openings over at Ebbets Field, one unofficial and one official with all the flag-waving, ball-tossing, band-playing trimmings. Next Sunday they will appear before the Flatbush folk in a game with the Phillies, but the ceremonies will be saved until April 22, when the Giants will help to stage the official inaugural.

Keen Races Expected.

This, the fifty-first year of the National League, promises one of the greatest races in history. Although the Giants and Pirates are generally considered the teams between whom ultimate victory lies, there are no fewer than four others which must be considered as pennant contenders. With the possible exception of the Chicago Cubs and Phillies every team has a chance.

The Pirates, with the same team that triumphed last year and a prospective pitcher or two added to its staff, may repeat and surprise no one. The Giants, bolstered in the outfield by Tyson and with a better pitching staff than Manager John McGraw has had at his command for many years, may bring the Little Napoleon his eleventh pennant.

The Robins, weakened only by a crippled infield which may be strengthened at any time, may come through. The St. Louis Cardinals, led by the great Hornsby, may fly their first championship flag. The Cincinnati Reds, into whom Wally Pipp has injected a new spirit, merely by his presence, have been knocking persistently at the door to success, and this may be their year. The Boston Braves showed signs of awakening as the 1925 season closed and may become fully aroused and ride on to triumph ere another season has passed. The Phils and Cubs alone are not seriously considered in the running.

The American League is not such a wide-open proposition. The Athletics and Washington Senators, champions now for two years, are the ones generally considered as the surest to be on the crest of the wave when the winds of September start to blow. The Yankees, one of the most powerful hitting teams ever assembled, have shown during the past few weeks enough to indicate that they will cause trouble wherever they go and to raise the hopes of the Yankee fans to fever pitch. They may not be disappointed.

The St. Louis Browns are rated as a possibility, and so are the Chicago White Sox, but the failure of Detroit, Cleveland and Boston to improve on the clubs that finished out of the running last season has caused the watchful to eliminate them as potential pennant winners.

During the intermission between last season and this there have been few changes. Joe McCarthy, who will manage the Chicago Cubs, is the only new pilot of the sixteen.

GIANTS ARE PRIMED FOR A GREAT FIGHT

Will Enter Race Determined to Dethrone Pirates—How Their Other League Rivals Compare.

By HARRY CROSS.

The impression to be gained from the optimism which was rampant at the Giants' training camp this Spring is that the New York club is going to make a powerful effort to wrest the pennant from Pittsburgh. Manager McGraw practically stands pat on his club with a few exceptions, having full confidence in his players to produce once more the kind of baseball which brought them championships before the Pirates usurped their position last year.

The New York club, from Manager McGraw down, regards last year's defeat as the penalty for some bad baseball and numerous injuries rather than of any vastly superior playing by the Pittsburgh team.

There is no question that the Giants' pitching staff appears more powerful than it did a year ago. The veterans have rounded into form with a surer touch and the youngsters have shown unusual promise. It has only to live up to the pre-season promise to hold its own with the pitching presented by Pittsburgh, St Louis and Cincinnati.

The Giants' defense will be stronger this season with Kelly back at first, the position he plays best. Lindstrom at third and Jackson at short should show great improvement after the experience they gained last season. Both are much improved ball players as the season starts. With Frisch permanently at second, the infield defense is equal to the best in the game.

There has been no question about the Giants' ability to hit. Last year, Young, Southworth and Snyder fell off badly in their hitting but this season they are once more back to their best form. The addition of Tyson in centre field adds to the hitting and fielding strength of the club.

May Carry Ten Pitchers.

Manager McGraw has won championships with pitching staffs which did not rate as highly as this year's collection of moundmen. It is not unlikely that he will carry a staff of ten moundsmen if he can devise a way to keep them in readiness for duty.

In Greenfield and Fitzsimmons, he has two youngsters who should win many ball games for the club, while in Jimmy Ring, the Giants have added a pitcher who should be of great value. With a club like the Giants supporting him, Ring figures to have one of the best seasons of his career. While Art Nehf is not yet in the best of shape, he should be ready for duty soon after the season starts. McQuillan and Scott are two other veterans who are likely to give more valuable service to the club this season and Virgil Barnes is another moundman McGraw expects to come through handsomely.

In addition to these, the Giants have Wisner, a much improved tosser; Tim McNamara, who may prove to be one of the season's surprises, and Chic Davies, the left-hander, whose worth is as yet somewhat problematical. Also there is Clarkson, who may win a regular place on the staff.

Besides Meusel, Young and Tyson as the outfield regulars, the Giants have Southworth as first utility outfielder and Moore and Carter, two promising youngsters. Besides Kelly, Frisch, Jackson and Lindstrom, McGraw has great reserve power in Groh and Farrell.

The catching staff, while experienced and dependable, is not fast, although the rejuvenation of Grover Hartley has been one of the encouraging features of the Spring season. There is also McMullen, who should add aggressiveness and speed to the backstop department.

No one in the Giants' camp this Spring showed as much enthusiasm and aggressiveness as Manager McGraw. He was away from the club much of the time last season through illness, but the new interest he has added to the situation augers that the club will be on its toes this year.

The Giants will go into the pennant race confident that they are just as good a club as the champion Pirates or any one else.

Infield Big Problem for Robins.

The Robins will start the season with an infield problem on their hands. Manager Robinson usually has one problem or another to combat each season. When it isn't the infield, it's the pitchers or something else. He has the pitching staff, a good outfield, is well equipped with catchers, but the left side of his infield is weak. The recent acquisition of Chick Fewster may prove the solution but he hasn't appeared in the lineup yet and time alone will tell.

In the first place, he gave away almost a whole team to get Johnny Butler for third base. Butler was taken ill and it is a question when he will be able to play and how much value he will add to the Robins when he is able to get in the line-up.

Brooklyn had a bad season last year and was tied for sixth place with the Phillies. Uncle Robbie hopes to do better this year. On his pitching alone he rates well up in his league. He has Dazzy Vance, who has no superior; Burleigh Grimes, Jess Barnes, Jess Petty and McWeeney, five boxmen who rank pretty well with any five one can pick from any club. McWeeney is regarded as a real find by Robbie.

Has Other Promising Hurlers.

On the pitching staff there is also Bob McGraw, who may develop into a valuable moundsman. Lefty Williams should also help. Ehrhardt, Tiny Osborne, Boehler, Moss and Stryker complete the staff. Mickey O'Neil, the former Boston catcher, has added aggressiveness to the catching staff, and with De Berry and Hargreaves there is nothing in the backstop department to worry about.

It is the infield which causes much consternation in the Brooklyn ranks. First and second are being cared for by Fournier and Milton Stock. At short is Rabbit Maranville, a tried veteran of long standing, but who hasn't the speed or hitting ability he had in former days. The illness of Butler has forced Robbie to use Marriott, the former Boston Brave infielder, and Standaert, a recruit at third.

The addition of Whitey Witt and Gus Felix has given speed to the Robins outfield. Robbie has another promising outfielder in Merwin Jacobson, and these, with the ever reliable Zach Wheat and Dick Cox should give the team sufficient strength in the outfield.

The Robins are likely to be a stronger factor in the race than is generally supposed, because of Robbie's ability to get the most out of his players. But his infield weakness may prove an insurmountable handicap unless he is able to bolster up the left wing.

Pirates Appear Strong as Ever.

The chances of the world's champion Pirates to retain their high baseball honors depends on the pitching staff. There is little or no change in the array of boxmen Manager McKechnie will send into the next pennant race and it must be remembered that these same pitchers went through a grueling flag campaign and a world's series strain successfully.

In speed and hitting ability the champions are as strong as ever, if not stronger. Such stars as Traynor, Cuyler and Wright should be just so much better after last year's valuable experience. Fred Clarke and McKechnie believe that if the pitchers do as well as they did last year, the Pirates will land on top again.

Aldridge, Kremer, Meadows, Sheehan, Yde, Morrison and Babe Adams make up a staff of tried veterans who should weather another hard campaign with distinction. Then, for reserve talent, Pittsburgh has Colloton, who has had some experience; Koupal, Joe Brown and Songer.

The Pirates have added two real stars to the club who may prove sensations this season. They are Paul Waner, the talented outfielder, and Hal Rhyne, the infielder from the coast. Although it is difficult to see where Waner can gain a place in the outfield with such players as Carey, Barnhart and Cuyler in shape, he should be a valuable utility man, and Rhyne undoubtedly will find opportunity to show his worth in utility work in the infield during the season.

The club which won the world's title will be intact. McInnis and Grantham will be available at first. Moore and Johnny Rawlings will be ready for work at second and Wright and Traynor are fixtures at short and third. The catching staff is sufficiently capable with Earl Smith, Gooch and Spencer.

The Pirates most certainly expect to repeat. They have a world of experience behind them and will have plenty of confidence from the start.

Reds Ready for a Good Start

For the first time since Jack Hendricks has been managing the Reds, he will be able to start the season with his strongest line-up. The club made a good showing last year mainly because of its good pitching staff, and this season the Reds hope to do even better and be a factor in the pennant race from the start.

Cincinnati figures to have strengthened in three particular spots. Much confidence is placed in the possibility of the new shortstop, Emmert, a boy from the coast. With Carl Mays back in shape the pitching staff should be strengthened and the addition of Walter Pipp has improved the infield. In his new environment the former Yankee first baseman is likely to have a fine season.

The outfield situation is improved with Walter Christensen, a hard hitter from St. Paul. Pipp at first, Critz at second, Emmert at short and Pinelli at third form a combination with defensive strength and hitting ability. Bohne and Dressen are available for utility duty. Luque will be able to take his pitching turn in May and Rixey, Pete Donahue, Jakie May, Red Lucas, Day and Springer should furnish good pitching.

Roush, Walker and Christensen make up a strong outfield trio. Rube Bressler and Zitzmann are good utility talent. The Reds finished in third place last season, and if Emmert holds up the shortstop position Hendricks hopes at least to beat the Cardinals for third place again and is optimistic enough to figure on something even better than that.

Cards Loom a Strong Factor.

Manager Rogers Hornsby of the Cardinals made a strong bid for third place in the pennant race last year but didn't quite make it. The club showed vast improvement after he took the helm, and if he had been in command from the start of the season St. Louis might have had a higher rating. The Cardinals are admitted by both McGraw and McKechnie to be the club which is going to furnish the strongest opposition in the National League this season.

Hornsby has added Vic Keen of the Cubs and Walter Huntzinger to his pitching staff this year, and it was a good staff a year ago. The pitchers include Bill Sherdel, Duster Mails, Bill Hallihan, Ed Dyer, Jess Haines, Rhem, Reinhart, Sothoron, Johnson, Stuart and Day. O'Farrell has been added to the catching staff, which includes Schmidt and Warwick.

Bottomly at first, Hornsby at second, Thevenow at short and Bell at third form an infield which is strong on the defense and powerful on attack. In the outfield Douthit, Blades and Hafey are the righthanded hitters, and Mueller, Flack and Jack Smith the lefthanded swingers.

This looks like the strongest club which has represented the Cards in years, and with a young, ambitious manager of Hornsby's type the team is pretty sure to be near the top.

Braves Promise Stiff Fight.

The peppery Boston manager, Dave Bancroft, entertains high hopes this season and will shoot for a place in the first division. He figures that he has the pitching and the defensive strength and hopes to develop a stronger batting club than a year ago. Eddie Brown will be an improvement in the outfield and his hitting will benefit the club. Wilson is another outfield improvement and strong hitting is expected from Dick Burrus, the first baseman, Neis, High, Jimmy Johnston and Welch.

The infield has been improved with Riconda at third and little Doc Gautreau rates to have a great season at second. With Banny himself at short and the vastly improved Burrus at first, the Braves' manager has some reason for his optimism.

The Braves' pitching staff is one which will make trouble for every club on the circuit. Zenewich, Cooney, Bill Ryan, Ike Kamp, Kyle Graham, Bob Smith, the converted infielder; Larry Benton, Wertz, a recruit from Worcester, and the veteran southpaw Mogridge, make up an impressive array of moundsmen. Gibson and Taylor are both fast capable catchers and on Frank Wilson, Mann, Neis, Brown and Jimmy Weich will rest the outfield responsibilities.

Boston's greatest asset is Bancroft, who is able to instil a world of aggressiveness into his players. He landed his club in sixth place last year and won the season's series from St. Louis.

Phils Face Two Big Problems.

The problems of Manager Art Fletcher of the Phillies this year will be his pitching staff and his infield defense. He has the batting power and last season it was the heavy hitting of his club which lifted it out of last place. The Phils have lost Jimmy Ring but Fletcher hopes to make up for this loss with four youngsters, Weyland Dean and Ernie Maun, the former Giants, Willoughby and Pierce.

First base has been a weak place on the Phils for some time and in placing Jack Bentley there the club should be strengthened both in defense and in hitting. At second, Fletcher has Fr[illegible]berg, with Huber at third and Sand[illegible] short. The left side of the infield [illegible] none too strong. The Phils lost mar[illegible] games last season through errors o[illegible] that wing.

Fletcher has a good outfield prospect in young Leach and with old [illegible] Williams, Mokan, Nixon, Durnin Schults and Harper, there is much hi[illegible] ting strength. Fletcher also has [illegible] strong trio of catchers in Wilson, Her[illegible]ns and Jonnard. Carlson, Crumple[illegible] Jack Knight and Frank Ulrich are th[illegible] other pitchers on whom the Phillies depend.

The Philadelphia manager has no easy task on his hands for outside of its hitting ability, the club does not look impressive.

Cubs Still an Uncertainty.

The Cubs have a new manager this season in Joe McCarthy, the former Louisville pilot, who is assuming the difficult job of trying to elevate the club from the cellar. McCarthy has collected some new players, but none of them is very impressive.

An effort is being made to strengthen the club's hitting, and in the outfield are Hack Wilson, the former Giant; Joe Kelly, the heavy hitter who was with Toronto last year; Brooks, Heathcote and a newcomer, Scott. Maurice Shannon of Louisville will be in the infield, probably at short, with Adams at second and Frigeau at third. Jimmy Cooney, last year with St. Louis, is likely to get the shortstop position unless Shannon shows exceptional merit. The reliable Charley Grimm will be at first.

There is little change from last season in the pitching staff. There is the Veteran Alexander, Kaufmann, Jacobs, Percy Jones, Guy Bush, Cooper, Millstead, Root and some other youngsters who have not yet shown anything exceptional. The catchers are Hartnett, Gonzales and Churry.

McCarthy's task looks like a difficult one, but his policy of making over the club to instil new life into it will doubtless bring results before the season is finished.

Heydler Predicts Battle Among 5 Clubs; Johnson Sees Tight Race, Comeback for Ruth

Predicting a tighter race than ever before, with five clubs as contenders, President John A Heydler of the National League yesterday predicted that the 1926 campaign would be the "really great year of baseball." In a statement to THE NEW YORK TIMES, President Heydler said:

"Every indication points to this being the really great year of baseball. The interest is greater than I have ever seen it before. More boys are out braving the bad Spring weather and trying to get in an inning or two of ball. I have seen them myself in towns and in the country.

Our league race should be tighter than ever before this year. We have five fine strong clubs, any one of which can win the pennant. Yes, we should have a splendid year. But what pleases me most is the sound, wholesome interest being taken in the game this Spring by the boys everywhere."

CHICAGO, April 10 (AP).—The 1926 race for the American League championship will be even tighter than a year ago and with at least six evenly strong teams contesting for the title, in the opinion of President Ban Johnson. He believes Babe Ruth will stage a remarkable comeback.

"Prospects are good for such a campaign in the American League, as critics who have estimated the clubs seem agreed," President Johnson said. "Philadelphia and St. Louis have set their eyes on a pennant, thus challenging Washington, but no less are the hopes of Chicago and Detroit. The New York Yankees have been speaking for themselves to refute early criticisms that the team did not look good. Cleveland has fresh hopes for its pitching, and the Red Sox are beyond question a better club in several essentials than the one which trailed last season."

IMPROVED YANKEES PREPARED TO CLIMB

Should Show Considerably Better Than in 1925—Athletics Loom as Team to Beat Senators.

By JAMES R. HARRISON.

The Yankees fell from second place to seventh in one season because of Babe Ruth's collapse, Scott's breaking down, Ward's slump and the general weakening of the team morale because of those three happenings. Having repaired his four weak fences, Miller Huggins hopes, even though he does not admit it, that he will bounce up as fast as he bounced down.

You can assign the Yanks a place anywhere from first to seventh and build up a reasonably sound argument to back your prediction. They are that kind of team. The Yanks have more "ifs" and "buts" attached to them than probably any other club in the big leagues. If one set of possibilities is realized, the Yanks will finish no lower than second or third. If another set goes through, they may easily repose in the recumbent depths of seventh.

Taking a mean average of all possibilities, it is safe to say that the Yanks will finish in about the middle—fourth place. We know first that Ruth is in great condition and looks about as good as ever. We assume that the rest of the crew, for they are older by a year, will be no worse than they were last season. The Athletics are growing and maturing, finding their real ability, learning and improving. Powerful last year, they should be more powerful this year.

New additions are not startling—Bill Wambsganss, the veteran infielder, who was cast off by the Red Sox, and Joe Pate, a veteran pitcher, bought from the Texas League.

If Hauser's knee is healed and he plays first base, the Macks will be that much stronger. Even without Hauser the team stands out as Connie Mack's best prospect since 1914.

Browns Look Dangerous.

"The best long-shot bet in the American League" is Miller Huggins's apt description of the Browns. This is another way of saying that George Sisler has a rugged, dangerous club, young, hustling and up-and-coming. It is just a question of how far the Browns can advance in one year.

Sisler's Winter trades have been chiefly for pitchers. He got Zachary and Ballou from Washington and Robertson from Chicago. The Yanks sold him Schang, the veteran catcher. The Browns thereby have strengthened their battery positions, where they were weakest in 1925.

Gaston, Giard, Ballou, Zachary, Robertson, Van Gilder, Falk, Jonnard, Wingard and Davis constitute a pitching staff that is only fair but has rosy possibilities in the younger twirlers—Gaston, Giard, Ballou and Wingard. Zachary has looked very good this Spring. Robertson is problematical and so is Davis.

Behind the bat are Schang, Hargrave and Dixon—an ensemble that still lacks complete class. Sisler has strengthened but not enough. He can stand two more good pitchers and one first-class catcher.

The infield of Sisler, McManus and either Lamotte or Gerber at shortstop is adequate to the occasion. Williams, Jacobson and Harry Rice, the outfielders, have no superiors as hitters and fielders.

The Browns also have strong reserves and are one of the two dark horses in the league.

White Sox Another Dark Horse.

Here is the other dark horse. Keep your eye on the White Sox. Eddie Collins has added a talented catcher in Harry McCurdy, a highly promising pitcher in Alphonse Thomas, lefthander bought from Baltimore, and a shortstop in Everett Scott, formerly of the Yankees.

The venerable Deacon may "make" the White Sox. With Ike Davis probably out for the season with an injury, Collins is counting on Scott to plug the one yawning gap in the Chicago defense.

Here is one of the best pitching staffs in baseball. Lyons and Blankenship, two top-notchers; Faber, a tough old veteran; Thurston, Thomas, Connally, Leverette and Edwards, the last-named a southpaw tried out once by the Indians.

The White Sox infield is air-tight—Sheely, Collins, Scott and Kamm. In the outfield are Falk and Mostil, two headliners, and the hard-hitting Bill Barrett, successor to Harry Hooper. Schalk, McCurdy and Crouse make up a well balanced catching staff. McCurdy can hit.

The Sox are a smart, shifty ball team that will bat harder than last year and get better pitching. There are few abler managers than Collins. Eternal hustle and capable leadership may make the Sox the big surprise of the season. With Collins in the game every day the Sox will follow the pace of the best ball team.

Tigers Remain Doubtful.

Ty Cobb is basing his hopes on two reinforcements to his infield—Gehringer, the Toronto youngster, at second base, and either Jack Warner or Bill Mullen at third base.

Otherwise the Tigers shape up the same as last season. A good outfield in Heilmann, Cobb, Manush and Fothergill, even if Cobb is not able to play regularly. Fairly good pitching, strong catching, powerful batting and poor fielding, with none too much harmony on the club.

The pitchers are about the same—Whitehill and Wells, southpaws; Dauss, Holloway, Stoner and Doyle, with Barfoot, once with the Cardinals, the only newcomer of importance.

The infield will have Blue at first, Gehringer at second, Tavener at short and Mullen or Warner at third, with Frank O'Rourke and Neun in reserve. Bassler heads a strong catching corps.

On paper the Tigers look good. They always do in the Spring. Cobb has yet to live up to Spring expectations. The Tigers can batter the fences and make flocks of runs, but Cobb has never been able to build up a defense in fielding and pitching. He faces the same problem this year. Once again it is safe to say that the Tigers will be right up there battling, if—

Indians Entertain High Hopes.

Like Connie Mack, Tris Speaker has stood pat. Unlike Connie, Tris did not finish second last year. He finished sixth, yet has made no changes in a team that looked hopeless from start to finish of 1925.

Still, Speaker and all the little Speakers are decidedly optimistic. Hopes run high in Cleveland. Tris says his pitchers will show a startling improvement. He expects great things from George Uhle and Joe Shaute, thinks Speece will be a winner and predicts that Lefty Miller, late of Ohio State, and Garland Buckeye, the roly-poly lefthander, will get into the regular class. Sherrod Smith, Kerr, Yowell and Lehr will stand by to give succor.

Hodapp, the $50,000 third baseman, is being counted on to round out the infield, but he is yet to show anything. Burns is not much of a first baseman. Either Spurgeon or Lutzke at second is only fair. Joey Sewell, shortstop, is the only high-class man in the infield.

If Charley Jamieson recovers from his bad slump of 1925 and Speaker keeps going in his miraculous style, the Indians will have a good outfield, no matter what McNulty, Lee and Summa do in right field. The catchers are Myatt, hard hitter; Luke Sewell, developing quietly, and Autrey, once tried out by the Yanks. Good but not startling, this receiving staff.

The Indians are sturdy hitters, but how they will break into the first division is still a mystery to most onlookers.

Red Sox Still Deemed to Cellar.

By unanimous vote, the Red Sox have been re-elected the doormat of the American League. There seems to be no competition. Lee Fohl got rid of his only good hitter, Ike Boone, and now has a seedy-looking outfit. Ehmke and Ruffing are excellent pitchers and Ira Flagstead is an efficient centre fielder. There you have the Red Sox.

In place of Wambsganss, released to the Athletics, Emmett McCann will cavort at second base. McCann, once with Brooklyn, was bought from Portland, and has made only a fair impression in the training camp. At third will be the slugging Fred Haney, obtained from Detroit. Todt at first and Lee or Rigney, just bought from the Tigers, at short complete the infield.

Alex Gaston three years with the Giants and last season with Toledo, has been added to the catching staff. The pitchers, besides Ehmke and Ruffing, are Wingfield, Ross, Zahniser, Neubauer and others. Simon Rosenthal, bought from San Antonio, will essay one outfield position and Roy Carlyle, probably, the other.

Johns Hopkins Scores Decisive Victory Over Oxford-Cambridge Lacrosse Team

BRITISH DEFEATED AT LACROSSE, 14-0

Oxford-Cambridge Team Fails to Get Attack Working Against Johns Hopkins.

LOVE IS HERO OF THE GAME

Tallies Five Times and Receives Able Support—Eight Goals Made in First Half.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., April 10.—The Oxford-Cambridge lacrosse team met defeat by 14 to 0 when it went into action against the Johns Hopkins team here this afternoon. The visitors have lost three of the four games they have played on their fourteen-game tour of the country and today's defeat was the most decisive they have sustained.

Love, playing second attack for the victors, was the hero of the game, finding the rival goal on five occasions. He was ably aided by his team mates, who did not fail to pass the ball to him whenever he gained an advantageous position. The winners were off to a fast start and had the British players on the defensive all during the contest.

In the first period Johns Hopkins tallied eight goals and the British players had to fight hard to keep the Baltimore twelve from rolling up an even higher count. The invaders were able to make only one shot at the Baltimore goal in this period and the effort was not a very strong one, the tide of battle changing almost instantly.

In the second half the British players sallied more frequently into enemy territory but their efforts weakened by the time they were within striking distance. Several times the Johns Hopkins goalkeeper was called upon to go into action, but only on a few occasions was his goal seriously threatened. The British team seemed to be in none too good form and apparently has not found its stride yet in this country.

ARMY BEATS PENN AT LACROSSE, 14-0

Heavy Offensive of the West Point Players Easily Crushes Red and Blue Twelve.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 10.—The West Point lacrosse team with Harry Wilson, the former Penn State football luminary, in the star role, crushed the University of Pennsylvania twelve on the field of the Merion Cricket Club at Haverford this afternoon by a score of 14 to 0.

The Army ran up eight goals in the first half and then added six more in the second for good measure. Penn was outplayed at every angle and never had a chance for victory. The only successful offensive waged by the Red and Blue resulted in a goal by Nocton in the second half, but the marker was not allowed by Lewkorn of Swarthmore, goal judge, who asserted Penn did not have three men back at the time, as is required by the American collegiate rules.

TIGERS IN LACROSSE TIE.

Lehigh's Fast Team Evens Count, 3-3, in Last Minutes of Play.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 10.—After Princeton got away to an early three-point lead, Lehigh's fast lacrosse team tied the count in the last minutes of play today, the game finishing a draw. The Pennsylvanians outpassed the Tigers throughout, but Princeton's defense, headed by Captain Jeffers, proved strong, no goals being scored through it during the first half.

Princeton showed superior speed in the opening half, and Thulin, Anderson and Nies scored goals in rapid succession. Lehigh perfected its passing attack in the second half, relying particularly on its favorite play, in which an attack man passes to his teammate from behind the cage. Widdowfield's and Lister's goals were hard shots from immediately in front of the goal, and Roberts scored the typing point on a bouncing ball from several yards out.

NELSON IS SCORING STAR

Makes Three Goals, While Keller Is Credited With Two, Hahn and Green One Each.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, April 10.—Yale this afternoon whitewashed the Stevens lacrosse team, which had gone undefeated since 1924, leading 3 to 0 at the intermission and running the count to 8 to 0 at the finish.

Yale's attack was kept going at a whirlwind gait during the second period, the stubborn Stevens defense having turned it back repeatedly in the first. Nelson was Yale's chief scoring star, with three goals to his credit. Keller lifted two through, while Hahn and Green flicked one through each, and Bornemann, the Stevens' goal, accidentaly kicked one into his own netting.

Captain Finsterbusch's all-round game excelled for Stevens.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., April 10.—The Montclair A. C. lacrosse twelve bowed in defeat to the superior all-round play of the New York University team here today and took the short end of the 3 to 0 score. Hawkins, third attack of the victors, proved a very fast player and scored one goal for his team.

The university players scored two goals in the first half and one in the second, displaying a capable and fast game from start to finish. The field was slowed down because of recent rains.

YALE AGAIN FIRST, WITH 4 TITLES WON

Carries Off Most Major Crowns of Indoor Season—Harvard Is Runner-Up.

By making a strong finish, Yale's athletic array has captured the bulk of Eastern intercollegiate honors for the 1925-26 indoor season. It is the second straight season of indoor supremacy for the Elis. With titles in four of the ten major branches of competition in their possession, their grip on the top is even firmer than a year ago.

Yale's closing victories in the fencing and polo tournaments enabled the Elis to pull away from all rivals in the final drive. Besides these triumphs, Yale carried off the intercollegiate league titles in swimming and water polo.

Harvard, providing one of the sensations of the campaign with a comeback that netted the Crimson's forces two titles, finished as runner-up to the Elis, while the other four championships were divided among Cornell, Pennsylvania, the Naval Academy and Columbia.

The championship list follows:

Boxing	Navy	Navy
Fencing	Yale, Navy	Yale
Gymnastics	Navy	Pennsylvania
Hockey	Yale	Harvard

HOUSER WILL COME EAST.

Barnes and Dye Also to Take Part in National A. A. U. Meet.

Bud Houser, Lee Barnes and Leighton Dye will head the contingent from the Hollywood Athletic Club of Hollywood, Cal., which will compete in the national A. A. U. championships at Philadelphia on July 2, 5 and 6, according to Bob Howard, athletic director of the organization. The Coast team, which finished fourth last year, is intact, and as several likely prospects will be with the club on its appearance at the games to be held under the auspices of the Sesquicentennial Exposition, expectations are high that Hollywood will finish in the lead this year.

Houser, winner of the shot-put and discus last year, is favored to repeat, as only recently he made a record heave of 158 feet and 7¾ inches with the discus. Barnes will compete against Charley Hoff, the great Norwegian, in the pole vault. Barnes has cleared 13 feet 5½ inches, and has set his goal at 14 feet, a mark that will call for the best effort from Hoff.

The team will come East two weeks before the games to finish its training. The Olympic Club of San Francisco is also expected to send a formidable team, although no announcement has been received by Dr. Orton, sports director of the exposition.

Saxon-Ptomey Bout Wednesday.

Johnny Saxon, Bridgeport middleweight, and Willie Ptomey of Fort Jay have been matched for the principal ten-round bout Wednesday night at the 212th Anti-Aircraft Regiment Armory. In two eight-round bouts the principals will be Joe Petio vs. Carl Moore and Tommy Kerackus vs. Carl Morris.

NAVY AND MARYLAND MEET AT FOOTBALL

But No Scoring Is Permitted and Coaches Direct Play—Study Pass Rule Next Saturday.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 10.—Football, even though under semi-match conditions, was played for the first time at this season of the year at the Naval Academy, when the teams of the Academy and the University of Maryland met in a practice game this afternoon.

The work was directed by Coaches Ingram of the Naval Academy and Byrd of Maryland, who were permitted on the field during the playing. Also there was no actual scoring, each team taking the offense for a definite period. Otherwise match conditions prevailed.

Both teams, using inexperienced players to a great extent, showed considerable strength on the offense, Maryland getting off its plays with more accuracy and snap. Snyder and Schrader carried the ball well for Maryland, while Morse did the best ground gaining for the Navy.

The new penalty rule for the forward pass was not observed, though it is planned to put it into effect next Saturday, when the teams meet again. Both tried it repeatedly, but only once was it completed by Maryland and for a slight gain.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 10.—Midshipman Howell J. Dyson of Alexandria, La., has been selected as captain of the Naval Academy wrestling team. He wrestled in the 145-pound class last year. Ray A. Mitchell of Knoxville, Tenn., has been selected manager.

ARMY FOOTBALL TEAM STARTS WORK TUESDAY

Sasse, Wing Coach, Will Be in Charge of the Drills—Many Veterans Available.

WEST POINT, N. Y., April 10.—Football practice for the West Point gridiron squad will begin next Tuesday. This announcement was made by Lieutenant L. M. (Biff) Jones, new head coach, who passed a few days here this week. Jones is still stationed at Fort Hoyle, Md., where he will remain until later in the Summer, coming here in ample time to begin the work of Fall training.

The Cadets will be put through their Spring football drills by Captain Sasse, who coached the West Point wings last Fall. Sasse will be assisted by Lieutenants Wicks and Knight, former players who are also stationed here. The chief work will be with those players who entered last Summer, some of whom are expected in the meantime to develop sufficiently to make the big squad when the season breaks.

The West Pointers have several of their football veterans indulging in other forms of Spring sports, among whom are Wilson, Born, Trapnell, Schmidt, Daly, Harbold and Hammack, all of whom are playing lacrosse; Hewitt, Sprague, Gilbreth and Landon on the track squad and Harding, who is on the baseball team.

Handling the ball, kicking and passing will be stressed in the work outlined for the gridiron men during the next few weeks, and it has been definitely decided to do but little else. Those in charge will be hampered somewhat by the fact that but a brief period each day can be utilized for football practice, with the military drill season and academic duties taking up practically every moment of time.

WILLIAMS LISTS 8 GAMES.

Freshman Nine Will Open Season Against Kent April 21.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., April 10.—A schedule of eight games has been arranged for the Williams freshman baseball team this Spring. The opening contest comes with Kent School here April 21. Poly Prep, Williston and Pawling are other opponents to be faced. The schedule follows:

April 21, Kent School; 24, Hoosac School.
May 1, Albany High; 6, Williston Seminary; 13, R. P. I. freshmen; 22, Deerfield Academy at Deerfield; 29, Pawling; 31, Poly Prep at Williamstown.

COLUMBIA ELEVEN DRILLS TOMORROW

Football Candidates Will Report to Coach Crowley for Spring Practice.

Active preparation for the 1926 Columbia football season will get under way at Baker Field tomorrow afternoon when Head Coach Charley Crowley calls the candidates together for the start of an intensive three weeks' training period. Thirty-five men already have signed for the drills and many more are expected to report to the head coach and his five assistants, John Depler, Billy Murray, Frank Brodil, Bliss Price and Ray Wagner.

Chief among the gridiron performers who already have signified their intention of taking part in the workouts are Captain-elect Bill Madden, Mike Sesit and Wally Aulich. Madden and Sesit, two of the chief offensive and defensive cogs in the Lion backfield last Fall, are counted on to enjoy a banner campaign in 1926, while Aulich, the big tackle who won a regular varsity berth last season after being kept out by injury the year before, is also figured as a fixture. All three are in topnotch condition, Madden having held down a regular berth with the championship basketball five and Aulich having captained the varsity wrestlers, with Sesit as one of the mainstays and present captain-elect.

Substitutes Will Report.

These three are the only veterans from the 1925 first eleven who will be available, but several substitutes already have indicated that they will be on hand. Cy Empringham, regular fullback in 1924, but out with injuries until near the end of the last campaign, is one of them, while Willie Williams, who saw plenty of service as a guard, and Osnato, Cuneo, Vermont and Hamilton, also linemen, will be on deck for the opening practice. In addition a number of freshmen from the 1925 yearling eleven will attempt to make an impression on the coaching staff, with Kumpf, Krisel and Lifiander, backs, among the chief aspirants.

Many of the men whom Coach Crowley will rely upon in the Fall will be unable to attend the Baker Field sessions because they are engaged in some other line of athletic activity. Ralph Furey, regular end, and Mount Norris, substitute halfback, who won his letter, are holding down regular positions on Andy Coakley's baseball team. Kaplan, George Pease's understudy at quarterback; K. Williams, a reserve end, and Breslin, Anderson and Greene, substitute backs, are also engaged in diamond competition.

Crew claims Paul Shaw, first string guard, and Tom Kerrigan, who made an impressive bid for a regular tackle berth in his first season with the varsity, while French and Alkoff, reserve linemen, are also offering allegiance to the blade-wielding sport. Dick Brady, regular end; Jim Reynolds, first string tackle during the latter part of the last campaign, and Ryan, a reserve wingman, are spending their time on South Field with the track squad under Carl Merner's tutelage in the field events. A number of freshman football players are busy with other forms of athletic activity.

Stars Lost by Graduation.

Quite a few gridiron standbys will be missing when Coach Crowley calls the roll next Fall, for graduation will have taken its inevitable toll. Captain George Pease, quarterback; Ray Kirchmeyer, fullback; Ray Wagner, end and the latest edition to the coaching staff; Steve Schimetitsch, centre, and Kal Wiberg and Martin Raphael, guards, will be the chief losses, and the coaching staff will be kept busy replacing them.

Last year's Spring practice was stretched out over a period of five weeks, but the attendance was not heavy and Coach Crowley has decided that a short intensive training period is more likely to bring out the men. The Spring drills at Columbia were inaugurated by Percy Haughton when he came to Morningside Heights in 1923.

Villanova Downs City College Nine With Rally in the Eleventh Inning by 12 to 4

C. C. N. Y. IS BEATEN IN ELEVENTH, 12-4

Villanova Ties Count in Ninth and Runs Riot on Bases in the Final Inning.

CRANE FALTERS AT START

But Settles Down and Holds the Losers in Check—Lavender Collapses at End.

Coming from behind to tie the score in the ninth inning and running riot on the bases in the eleventh frame, Villanova swamped City College yesterday afternoon in the Lewisohn Stadium, 12 to 4.

Although Villanova had a much better nine than the Lavender, for ten innings he game was nip and tuck, with both Josephson and Crane twirling good ball. The latter, going into the box in the first inning with the bases full and none out, after walking the first man and forcing in a run, settled down and from then on was invincible. City College counting only two more runs in the eleven innings and those on lucky scratch hits.

Tony Masciardi, Villanova right fielder, and Curtin divided the batting honors for the day, both ramming out four singles in five trips to the plate. Masciardi succeeded in getting to base every time he faced the Lavender pitchers.

Masciardi also contributed the fielding feature of the afternoon when he raced back to the right field fence and with his back to the wall jumped high to rob Dono of a sure hit.

Villanova knocked two pitchers off the mound in the eleventh. Curtin started the frame with his third single of the afternoon. Connell put him on second with a sacrifice bunt and when Cotter rammed a single to right field Curtin crossed the rubber, putting Villanova into the lead. Jacobs lashed out the first ball to left field and Josephson was taken from the box, Moder replacing him. Masciardi, the first man to face him, counted his fourth hit of the afternoon, scoring Cotter.

On a squeeze play Lolas laid down a perfect bunt, scoring Jacobs, and when Moder threw to first to catch Lolas Masciardi dashed across the plate. Crane hit a long fly to Donstein, who dropped the ball, Lolas scoring all the way from first base on the play. The game turned into a farce, the entire Lavender team cracking, and before the inning was over eight runs had crossed the rubber.

City College scored two runs in the first inning without making a hit. Griffith walked the first four men to face him, and Crane was rushed in from the bull pen. Crane walked Starr, but got the next three men in order.

STAR BOWLERS MEET TODAY

Spinella-Lindsey to Face Gerloski-Shackett at Dwyer's.

Two of the leading bowlers in the East will meet two stars from the Middle West in a special match which opens at Dwyer's Broadway Academy this afternoon when Barney Spinella and Mort Lindsey of New York engage Harry Gerloski and Bill Shackett of Detroit. Gerloski has been bowling sensationally this year and featured his work by winning the all-events championship in the American Bowling Congress tournament, which ended last week, with a mark of 1,981. This record has been surpassed only twice in the history of the A. B. C. tournaments.

Al Irving and Alex Toveriski will clash in the twelve-round feature bout at the 102d Medical Regiment Armory Thursday night as the first contest in an elimination series to determine National Guard ring champions. Fred Ullman and Johnny Darcey have been signed in the eight-round semi-final.

MANHATTAN DOWNS RUTGERS BY 6 TO 4

Takes Lead in First Inning on Cohalan's Home Run and Holds It Throughout.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., April 10.—Rutgers lost to Manhattan here today in its first home game of the season, 6 to 4. The visitors took kindly to the delivery of Carl Wolfe, bespeckled scarlet southpaw. In the first inning C. Cohalan hit a home run over the running track.

Manhattan took a big lead in the second scoring three runs. Cronin singled over short and Hayes was safe on an error. Freda flied out, but Sheridan singled to right and Cronin scored. When Hibbs attempted to catch Hayes at third, the throw was wild and the runner tallied. Freda came in on an infield error. Fast base running was a factor in Manhattan's victory.

In the fourth the visitors counted twice, Hayes walked, Freda was safe on an outfield error, Hayes scoring on the play, Freda going to third. Sheridan grounded out, J. Cohalan flied to left. Stanton singled through short, Freda scoring, closing Manhattan's run getting.

Rutgers threatened in the fifth when Hanf walked and advanced on a sacrifice. Cohalan fumbled Hibbs's grounded and Hanf tried to score on the play, but was out at the plate. Again in the seventh successive singles by Raab and Hanf put Rutgers in position to score, but Hanf was caught at second, closing the budding rally. Successive hits by Wolfe and Denman and Terrill's walk gave the home team a run in the eighth.

Rutgers made a desperate bid in the ninth. Raab walked, Hanf singled and Eisenmann brought both men in with a double to centre. With two out, however, Wolfe was caught off second, ending the game.

Launches Home Baseball Season With a 9-1 Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., April 10.—The Lehigh baseball team launched the home season with a 9 to 1 victory over Dickinson College here today. Slim Weston, on the mound for Lehigh, was effective, wavering only slightly in the seventh when doubles by Cook and Sweet netted Dickinson's lone tally.

Weston allowed but one hit up to the seventh and with fast and clever fielding, but one man reached base in that time.

of the play. He caught a smart whack from Rothenfeld and, turning swiftly, caught Norris off second. Lorch then singled, but the side went out when Kunitz hit to short and was put out at first.

Smith Continues to Suffer.

New York University came back for its second helping of three runs when Kelly hit a double. Corbin laid down a pretty sacrifice bunt along the first base line. Smith thereupon walked Madison. Smith found Francis facing him next and belted him in the ankle, filling the bases.

Ingram singled to centre, scoring Kelly and Madison. He stole second and Smith walked. Davis. The bases were again full. Lincoln hit a terrific drive through the air at Whittaker, who blocked the ball, causing it to go higher into the air. He got a second chance to catch it as it came down, but failed, and Francis scored. Columbia turned in its only double play of the game and retired N. Y. U. The play was Lorch to Whittaker to Rothenfeld and put out Lincoln as he came down to second and Watson as he came to first.

There was no further scoring until the beginning of the fifth, but two plays occurred in the intervening innings that brought cheers from the crowd. One was the N. Y. U. double play, in the fourth inning in which Captain Francis speared a high fly and nailed a Columbia out at first. The other was a bit of jugglery by Stewart in right field. Captain Negri slammed a long fly out in that territory which looked as if it would go over the fence for a homer. It bounced on the very edge of the boards, however, caromed to a tree, eventually landing in Stewart's hands soon enough to stop the Columbia Captain at second.

Columbia got its second run and threatened to get several more in the fifth, the inning that Corbin went out and Brooks came in. Kunitz got on and advanced to second on a wild pitch. Furey went out on a fly. Whitaker struck out. Negri then lifted a Texas leaguer over third and scored Kunitz. Corbin walked Smith and Norris and had the bases full. Brooks here returned Corbin and Trentacosti hit a line drive to Lincoln which he speared to retire the side.

N. Y. U. scored its two runs in the sixth when Brooks got on first by an infield hit. Madison then hit his home run. The side retired without further scoring, however, as Ingram flied out, Lincoln was out at first and Watson fanned.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 10.—George Washington High School, continuing its string of victories to three straight, defeated the Princeton freshman nine here this afternoon, 6 to 5.

The feature of the game was the performance of Heinmann, the visiting pitcher, who fanned ten of the opposition, several of them in important places in the game. The school boys gained a commanding lead early in the game, but Princeton scored five runs in the fifth, sixth and seventh. In the last frame Strubing led off with a double and counted when Stewart slashed out a home run, bringing the Tiger cubs to within one run of a tie.

Orlando Track Closes Gates With Trajanus Beating Shindy in the Final Feature

TRAJANUS WINNER AS ORLANDO CLOSES

Get-Away-Day Crowd Sees Gelding Nose Out Shindy in the Sentinel Purse.

MARY WILLIAM SURPRISES

Pays $47 for $2 in Fourth Race—Porto de Oro, the Favorite, Finishes in Third Position.

ORLANDO, Fla., April 10 (AP).—Trajanus, seven-year-old Rock View gelding, with Jockey Tryon, about the best of the riders here, in the saddle, took the Orlando Sentinel Purse at a mile and one-eighth, feature of the get-away-day program today. Trajanus had to fight for his victory, winning by only a nose margin from Shindy. Margaret Gaut finished next to Shindy.

Form was sent aglimmering in the fourth when Mary William startled the crowd by scampering home ahead of Keolani and rewarding the favored few who wagered on her chances at the rate of $47 for a $2 mutuel pasteboard.

Porto de Oro, the well played favorite, could do no better than third, while Maddenstown, another one which was well liked, was among the also rans.

a H. P. Whitney entry.

Miniator, slow to get going, responded gamely to punishment and, closing with a belated rush under a good ride, got up in the closing strides. Best Friend broke very fast and opened up a winning lead, but weakened in the last jump. A. P. Canale, close to the leader from the start, held on with good courage. Noon could not keep up in the last part. Capricorn was not persevered with when his task looked hopeless.

Johnny Campbell, showing the most speed from the break, stood repeated challenges from Bodyguard and had something left at the end. Joella J. moved to the leaders with a rush at the turn out of the back stretch and was going fast through the final sixteenth. Bodyguard forced a fast pace for the first five furlongs but tired. McCrimmon lacked early speed. He improved his position but could not threaten the leaders.

The latter, outrun in the early stages, finished with good speed. Nat Evens, prominent in the early racing, could not keep up when put to a drive.

Opperman, outrun in the early racing, gained stoutly when called on and, closing with high speed, wore the leaders down to get up in the final stride. Lounger raced evenly throughout and held on gamely to the end. Cudgeller set a fast pace from the start and raced under mild restraint, but tired when the real issue came. Dancing Fool, well handled, was reserved off the pace until the last quarter. He responded with good courage, slipped through on the rail in the stretch run and wore Clique down in the last sixteenth. Clique moved to the leaders and assumed command, only to falter in the final issue. Rupee raced well and held on gamely. Fleetwood showed a good effort. Mary Ellen O. was always far back.

Spugs was not hurried until the last half mile. He gained stoutly, wore the leaders down and was going away at the end. Yoshimi was rushed into a long lead rounding the turn for home, but faltered right at the end. Mary B. finished stoutly. Island Fairy was used up forcing the pace. Wilkes-Barre showed a dull effort.

Spanish Heavyweight May Come Over With Descamps and Meet Willis—Other News.

By JAMES P. DAWSON.

The prospect of war to the hilt with rival promoters during the coming outdoor season is not worrying Promoter Tex Rickard. At least, the veteran promoter at his offices in Madison Square Garden yesterday afternoon exhibited no great alarm over the reception accorded the announcement that Humbert Gugazy, Ebbets Field promoter, had bagged the Jack Delaney-Ad Stone bout almost out of the lap of Rickard.

Harford Handicap to Feature Opening Card at Havre de Grace on Wednesday

RACING WEDNESDAY AT HAVRE DE GRACE

Thirteen-Day Meeting to Get Under Way With Four $10,000 Stakes Listed.

HARFORD OPENING FEATURE

Noah, Last Year's Winner, Entered in 6-Furlong Dash—270 Stake Nominations.

Two hundred and seventy nominations have been received for the four $10,000 stakes which will be run during the thirteen-day meeting of the Harford Agricultural and Breeders' Association which will open at Havre de Grace on Wednesday. The Harford and Philadelphia Handicaps have drawn 57 and 43, respectively, while the Chesapeake received 45 and the Aberdeen drew 105 nominations. The handicaps are for three-year-olds and upward, the Chesapeake is restricted to the three-year-olds and the Aberdeen is for the juveniles.

The Harford at six furlongs will feature the opening day and promises to bring to the post one of the smartest lot of sprinters of the Spring season. One of the probable starters is Harry Payne Whitney's Noah, which won the event last year and which has been a two-time winner at Bowie.

Senator Norris Ready.

Possibly the fittest of the other Harford nominations are H. G. Bedwell's Senator Norris, another Bowie winner; J. Edwin Griffith's Single Foot, W. S. Kilmer's Sunsard, the Lexington Stable's Prince of Bourbon, Lee Rosenberg's Extra Dry, Samuel Ross's Cinema, Mrs. Margaret Emerson Baker's Rockman, Robert A. Smith's Dizzy Blonde and Golden Spire, E. F. Whitney's Joy Smoke and the Xalapa Stable's Loved One.

American Flag, the crack three-year-old of last season's racing and the most formidable bidder for the four-year-old crown of the current year, is in Philadelphia with Prince of Bourbon, the smartest three-year-old that raced in Maryland last Fall; Senator Norris, Singlefoot, Joy Smoke, Color Sergeant, Macaw, Loved One, Edisto, Extra Dry, Sun Pal, Sea Rocket, Golden Rule, Devonshire, Punjab, Thomasine, Golden Spire, Backbone, Blondin, Rapture, Slylease, Traffic, Wilderness, J. Fred A., Gay Comet, Cudgeller, Prince Hamlet, Aga Khan, Sir Ronald, Amberjack, Hamadan, Lounger, Crusader, Dazzler, King Solomon's Seal, Postillion, By Hisself, Harry Baker, Topboot, Feysun, Sunard, Aldin, Asinia, Sunny Love and Eighear.

The Chesapeake numbers among its prospective starters some of the smartest of the East's candidates for the Preakness and Kentucky Derby Stakes. Not improbably it will bring together for the first time Timmara and Canter, which have been training at Prince George's Park. Timmara is a Bowie winner.

Many Stars in Chesapeake.

Derby hopes of the Glen Riddle Stable in the Chesapeake are Dress Parade, Crusader and Corvette. Harry Payne Whitney will rely on Macaw, Color Sergeant, Blondin, Slylease, Traffic and Rapture. Walter J. Salmon has Flight of Time, Display, Funjab, Adria, Bwhatan and Briar Broom; the Searam Stable, Harass, winner of the $10,000 Daytona Stakes at Miami; the Saramore Stable, Rockman. Chocolate Soldier and Montferrat, and the Killer Stable, Asinia, Aldin and Sunny Love.

Other formidable eligibles are Mrs. Walter M. Jeffords's Mars, Albert C. Bostwick's Marche Militaire, Lee Rosenberg's Ingrid, Commander J. Ross Fosa's Penstick, the Xalapa Farm Stable's Memory Lane, the Sage Stable's Applecross, the Greentree Stable's Lancaster and Navigator. The Chesapeake will be renewed get-away day, April 28.

Two-year-old winners in the Aberdeen are Tamiami Trail, Noon, Jack Horgan, Edith D., Titina, Red Rocket, Capricorn and Miniator. The smartest two-year-olds that will appear in Maryland are still uncovered, while the lot up from the Winter tracks is hardly up to the average of last Spring. Generally bad training weather through March handicapped the trainers of the Eastern stables. It is not unlikely that Havre de Grace racing will bring out two-year-olds that will distinguish themselves later on. Mother Goose, Jingle Foot, Canter and Enchantment all made their initial bows at the track in other years.

ELSWORTH TAKES TWO CUPS IN SHOOT

Captures Scratch and Travers Island Trophies in Field of 46 Gunners.

SIMONSON IS A WINNER

His Card of 50 Best at Mineola Traps—Stillwagon Captures Cup Shoot-Off at Jamaica Bay.

H. J. Elsworth was the principal winner at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club, yesterday. He took the high scratch cup from a field of forty-six gunners with a card of 95 out of a possible 100 targets. He also was the winner of the Travers Island Cup, besides being one of the gunners to return a full score of 100 targets in the race for the high handicap prize.

W. E. Ferguson was the second high scratch gunner. He had a total of 96. The third scratch cup went to A. P. Palmer, who finished one lower than Ferguson. It was all good shooting, as a high wind made the conditions not particularly good.

No less than eight gunners had full scores of 100 targets in the shoot for the high handicap cup. They were A. E. Atherton, A. P. Palmer, H. J. Elsworth, Harry Eagle, C. J. Zucca, M. L. Tirrell, A. F. MacNichol and G. C. Walsh. On the shoot-off, the winner was H. Eagle. Then came A. F. MacNichol, followed by M. L. Tirrell.

The distance cup went to E. H. Locatalli, who had a straight string of 25 targets, shooting from the 20-yard mark. The doubles cup was won by F. A. Seibert, who broke 47 out of 25 pairs of doubles.

YALE TRIO TAKES DANFORTH TROPHY

Defeats Triangle Club, 11½ to 9½ in Tourney for National Open Polo Championship.

PLAY THRILLS THROUGHOUT

Teams Only One Point Apart Until Last Few Minutes—Muir and Kinny Outstanding Stars.

The Yale University indoor polo trio sprang a surprise by defeating the Triangle Polo Club last night at the Squadron A Armory, 11½ to 9½, carrying off the Charles E. Danforth trophy representative of the national open championship of the United States Polo Association. Last night's match was probably the fastest and most exciting of the entire series of all six classes and the closest game ever played, not more than one point separating the teams at any part of the game, except in the last three minutes.

For three periods both teams battled on even terms and at the end of the third the score stood 8½ to 8 in favor of Yale. At the beginning of the final session the Triangle trio tied the score by scoring a goal minus a foul, which was committed at the time.

Then Barrett, No. 1 player of the Blue, scored a goal and put his team in the front, but soon after the break in the game came. The losing team rushed the ball down the field, but a long shot by one of the players came in contact with a teammate's mount and bounded back into Yale hands. This occurred not far from the Ell goal and Guest hit it in, practically insuring victory. Barrett then scored again and with but a minute or two left Lee made a goal for the Triangles.

Inasmuch as Yale was defeated last week by the N. Y. A. C. and the N. Y. A. C. was thoroughly beaten by the Triangles, 12½ to 1 in the Class H tournament, the Triangles were favored to win. The two low scorers were the stars of the game. Muir was the outstanding light for Yale, while Kinny shone for the losers, the latter nullifying many attempts by Guest, the Yale star, and being an important factor in breaking up the Blue's passing.

Mrs. Charles E. Danforth Jr. presented the cup to the winners.

The line-up:

YALE (11½)	TRIANGLES (9½)
1—Barrett.	1—Ladin.
2—Guest.	2—Kinny.
Back—Muir.	Back—Lee.

Goals—Guest 5, Barrett 4, Muir 2, Ladin 0, Lee 2. Fouls—Guest, Ladin 3, Lee 2.

Referee—Captain O. I. Holman. Time of quarters—7½ minutes.

TITLE MATCH SOUGHT.

Winner of Zbyszko-Steinke Wrestling Bout May File Challenge.

When Wladek Zbyszko, Polish grappler, and Hans Steinke, German heavyweight, go to the mat tomorrow night in their finish match at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory they will be struggling for recognition as qualified contenders for the world's heavyweight title held by Joe Stecher, Nebraskan, of scissors-hold fame. This match is one of an interesting card arranged by Promoter Jack Curley to be conducted by the Campania A. C. Zbyszko and Steinke are both reported eager for a match with Joe Malcewicz, Utica grappler, who has been selected by the State Athletic Commission as the man best qualified to face Stecher in a bout for the title. It is expected that the winner of tomorrow night's match will file a challenge for the heavyweight title with the commission.

23D STREET Y. WINNER.

Takes Manhattan-Bronx Track and Field Title With 36½ Points.

$1,000 TROPHY UP FOR POLO MOUNTS

Home Title Insurance Prize at Brooklyn Horse Show Drawing Big Entry.

Competition for the Home Title Insurance Company trophy among the polo ponies is expected to be one of the outstanding features of the Brooklyn Horse Show which will be held April 20-24, judging from the number and class of the entries that have been promised for this event. The trophy, valued at $1,000, is one of the most valuable ever offered in the metropolitan district for this class.

Increasing interest in polo, both indoor and outdoor, and the resultant added improvement in polo ponies, was the prime cause behind the donation of the trophy by the Home Title Insurance Company, which numbers many clever players in its organization, the most active being President Henry J. Davenport.

Members of the English international indoor polo team are expected to be in the ring to assist in the judging on the night of the pony championship. These players came over here for the purpose of meeting the leading trios in the United States, but an unfortunate injury to Captain Smart, one of the best players of the group, who suffered a broken arm while training in Florida, caused a suspension of activities. Lieut. Col. T. P. Melville, veteran indoor and outdoor international polo'st, is expected to be in the ring with Harry T. Peters, master of the Meadowbrook Hunt.

President George C. Sherman of the Indoor Polo Association will make a formidable attempt to lift the trophy with an entry of four of his best polo ponies. The veteran poloist is reputed to have some of the finest ponies in the country and the quartet that he ships to Brooklyn can be expected to make a fine showing.

Cyclone, for many years the champion polo pony in the New York sector, shown at the Brooklyn classic a number of times and on each occasion defeating a spectacular field, met his death in Central Park last year and the winner of the Home Title Insurance trophy will no doubt be nominated to the place formerly occupied by this great pony.

Among the other entries for the polo pony classes are: 101st Calvary, 105th Field Artillery, Squadron A, J. Walter Koppe, Earl T. Munkenbeck, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Loud, Carl Pflug, Warren Sackman, H. S. Grossman, G. M. Carnochan and Godfrey Preece.

SUGGS IS VICTOR AGAIN.

Wins Nine Out of Ten Rounds—Sakamoto Knocked Out.

Chick Suggs, New England's flashy negro bantamweight, added Jackie Gordon, Brooklyn fighter, to his list of vanquished rivals last night in the feature bout before a capacity gathering at the Commonwealth Sporting Club. Suggs carried off the honors in nine of the ten rounds. Gordon appeared to advantage only in the third session when he made Suggs miss repeatedly. Suggs weighed 122¾ pounds and Gordon 125½.

In the other scheduled twelve-round battle Johnny Filucci, Harlem junior lightweight, knocked out Jimmy Sakamoto, Japanese lad, in the fifth round, Referee Jack O'Sullivan stopping the contest after the round had progressed 2 minutes 35 seconds. Sakamoto had been battered helpless. Sakamoto went down twice in this session. Filucci weighed 128½ pounds and Sakamoto 130½.

HASSAN KNOCKOUT VICTOR.

Turkish Heavyweight Drops Hall in the Fourth at Ridgewood S. C.

Hagan Hassan, Turkish heavyweight, last night knocked out Roscoe Hall, Paterson boxer, in the fourth round of their scheduled six-round feature bout at the Ridgewood Groves S. C., Brooklyn.

Mike Reilly, West Side welterweight, won the decision from Pete Scarano of Williamsburgh, in the six-round semi-final.

In the other six-round bouts Willie O'Connell, West Side flyweight, and Al Brown battled to a draw; Joe Marcainte and Nick De Salvo fought a draw and Harry Traub won the decision from Eddie Oliver.

DAVIS CUP DATES SET FOR FOREST HILLS

Interzone Match Will Be Staged by the West Side Tennis Club Aug. 26, 27 and 28.

EUROPEAN PLAY ARRANGED

Final to Be Completed by July 27—Australia Explains Failure to Enter.

To the list of tennis attractions for the 1926 season to be held in the metropolitan area was added the Davis Cup interzone match yesterday, when it was made known that this engagement probably will be held at the West Side Tennis Club, Forest Hills. The dates are Aug. 26, 27 and 28. The other big tournaments scheduled to be held in the Long Island stadium are the men's national championship and the women's national singles and doubles championships.

The date of the interzone match falls a month after the time limit set for the playing of the final round of the European ties. Announcement of the schedule of the European ties, adopted at the recent meeting of the International Tennis Federation in Paris, was made yesterday by the United States Lawn Tennis Association. The first round is to be completed by May 4, the second by May 18, the third by May 31, the semi-final by July 13 and the final by July 27.

"There will be no play during June unless the nations reaching the semi-finals elect to meet in that month. The French and English championships will both be held during June and the dates set for the Davis Cup play were selected so as to avoid any conflict with the championship tournaments, which are expected to attract many of the leading players of England, France and the United States.

The same committee that was put in charge of the European play last year has been reappointed to direct it again this year. The members are E. R. Clarke, R. J. McNair and A. E. M. Taylor.

Australians Explain Attitude.

In a letter received by Julian S. Myrick, Chairman of the Davis Cup Committee, from Thomas H. Hicks, honorary Secretary of the Australian Lawn Tennis Association, it is explained that Australia's failure to challenge for the cup this year was due to the fact that a representative team could not be sent. The fact that the United States failed to send a team to the Antipodes in the Winter did not have any influence upon Australia's decision.

The letter follows:

"It was with extreme regret that the council came to this decision, but we had no alternative owing to the certainty of only a weak team being available and the consequent probability of our having to face a further substantial financial loss if such a team were sent. We fully realize the national importance of the Davis Cup contests and their bearing on the maintenance of friendly relations between the participating nations, and sincerely trust next year we will again take our place among the competitors.

"Please accept my assurance that the failure of your association to send a team to Australia last year did not influence us in any way in coming to our decision not to challenge this year. As a matter of fact this was not mentioned during the discussion."

North Side Event May 8.

The official schedule of the Sanction and Schedule Committee of the United States Lawn Tennis Association has not yet been given out for publication, but it has been learned that the University Heights Tennis Club will again have the honor of launching the metropolitan season. The North Side championship singles for men will begin there on May 8.

One of the most important of the early attractions is the Church Cup competition between New York, Boston and Philadelphia. These matches will be played at the West Side Tennis Club on June 11 and 12, with Boston defending the cup. Richards will be lost to the New York team, as he will sail for France in May with Howard Kinsey, the two having been selected to represent the United States in the international matches with England and France and to play in the national championships of the two countries.

TWO SQUASH GAMES TO GET FINAL TEST

Exponents of Tennis Variety Will Play Team of Stars Who Call Racquets Type Best.

The rivalry between the advocates of squash tennis and squash racquets has reached the stage where the two sides have decided to have a "showdown." On Tuesday and Thursday of this week each side will marshal its hosts and endeavor to demonstrate to the other that its own game is the better. On Tuesday the squash tennis players will play the squash racquets stars at the University Club and on Thursday the same players will engage each other on the squash tennis courts of the Yale Club.

There will be ten players on each team. The squash tennis combination will include all the members of the first ten except Hewitt Morgan, who was forced out of the national court tennis championship last week owing to illness and ranks fourth at squash tennis.

The members of the team are Fillmore Hyde of the Harvard Club, the national champion; Thomas R. Coward of the Yale Club, No. 2; H. R. Mixsell, Princeton Club, 3; Rowland B. Haines, Columbia University Club, 5; William Rand Jr., Harvard Club, 6; Otis L. Guernsey, Yale Club, 7; Gavin Brackenridge, Princeton Club, 8; George M. Rushmore, Harvard Club, 9, and George G. Davidson, Crescent A. C., 10. Either Charles M. Bull Jr. of the Crescent A. C. or Augusta J. Cordier of the Yale Club, both former members of the first ten, will be selected as the No. 4 man.

The squash racquets team has not been selected, but it will be composed of players chosen from the following group: A. E. Ells, University Club, former metropolitan champion; P. K. Keenan, Montclair A. C., runner-up to W. Palmer Dixon for the title this year; R. W. Gilmore, University Club champion; Darwin P. Kingsley, champion of the club last year; R. Earl Fink, Montclair A. C.; Royal E. T. Riggs and R. F. De Voe of the University Club, Junius Richards, L. McK. Miller and Henry Harper of the Rockaway Hunting Club, and Henry Munroe and L. F. Bishop of the Racquet and Tennis Club. Dixon, who holds the national title, will not be available for the team.

The match will be decided on a point basis, the team getting the greatest number of both games to be declared the winner.

FIRST SOUND RACE IS SET FOR MAY 8

Special Event for R Class Yachts Will Be Held by the Larchmont Club.

NEW CRAFT ARE EXPECTED

Junius Morgan's Sloop Among Those Now Building, Which Probably Will Be Ready.

By SEABURY LAWRENCE.

The first yacht race of the coming season in Long Island Sound will be sailed on Saturday, May 8, under the auspices of the Larchmont Yacht Club, according to an announcement yesterday by Edmund G. Anderson, Chairman of the Race Committee of that organization. This is a special contest, staged to bring together several of the R Class yachts, including some new boats in that division and precedes by some three weeks the opening of the championship season at the Riverside Yacht Club on May 29.

It is also possible that several of the new Sound Inter-Club sloops may be given a race on May 8, if they can be completed in time. There are twenty-eight of the Inter-Club boats contracted for with the Nevins building plant at City Island but none of them have gone overboard yet.

The new R Class yachts which will be seen under canvas for the first time at Larchmont's opening race will probably include the Ardelle, the Mower-designed sloop which is practically completed at the Nevins yard for Donald H. Crowl of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club; the new sloop building at Herreshoff's for Junius Morgan and the Alarm, designed by John G. Alden and owned by Robert Mallory and Hamilton Hitt. The last named boat was built in Germany last year, but did not reach this side in time to take part in any races.

Older Boats to Compete.

Among the older R boats expected to be out to try for the early Larchmont prizes are Quiver, owned by Commodore Philip R. Mallory of the American Yacht Club, which captured the Long Island Sound championship in the class last year; Barbara, another Alden designed sloop owned by Vice Commodore C. D. Mallory of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club and Astrild, a fast boat that was new last year and which is the property of H. Wilmer Hanan.

Also competing in the R Class during the coming season will be the Gamecock, built by Herreshoff and owned by Commodore George Nichols and Doress, the property of Commodore Robert Law, Jr., of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club and which had a good season last year in the capable hands of Burton Hart. Doress will come out this year with a curved mast and is expected that she will be faster than she was last year when she carried a straight spar. It is uncertain as yet whether Gamecock and Doress will get into the early racing.

As was the case last year the R Class will be one of the keenest racing divisions on Long Island Sound. The R boats will take part in many of the special races on the Sound, including the Childs Cup and other trophy races and the New York Yacht Club will hold a series for the class in September for the trophy recently put up by the club for this class, which, in the opinion of the officers, has done the most to promote the sport of yachting within the past year.

Typhoon to Race With Forties.

The addition of the New York Yacht Club forty-footer Typhoon to the racing roster will increase the rivalry in this already very lively class. The Typhoon was purchased during the past week by Charles C. Smithers, a veteran racing yachtsman, and will be raced during the season by Captain Smiters and his sons. This sloop was not in commission last season, having been laid up since the death of W. J. Ehrich, who raced the yacht for several seasons. Following Mr. Ehrich's death Typhoon was purchased by a syndicate headed by Harry L. Maxwell which held the yacht until a purchaser could be found who was certain to race her.

With Typhoon in commission there will be five of the Long Island Sound forties which will race through the season, the others being Banshee, owned by Vice Commodore Maxwell; Shawara, the property of W. H. Hoffman and C. Sherman Hoyt; Rowdy, owned by Holland S. Duell and Mistral, the property of W. E. Bell. The class is now ten years old.

Besides the Sound forties there will be a number of these fine sloops racing on Buzzards Bay and at Marblehead, with the Eastern Yacht Club fleet. In the former group will be the new forty building at Herreshoff's for Edward L. Cudahy of Chicago, which will be named Marlee. Batsey of City Island is making a full suit of racing sails for the new yacht and it is expected that she will race through the season. The others of the Buzzards Bay group ar the Pampero, now owned by Chandler Hovey and the Sally Ann, owned by Spencer Borden Jr.

Pampero Is Expected.

It is understood that Pampero and Sally Ann will come down to the Sound for Larchmont Race Week and that they will also race on the New York and Eastern Yacht Club cruises. In the Marblehead division of the forty-foot class will be Amory Coolidge's Cockatoo and Thomas S. Shepard's Katherine. Another yacht of the division, making a total of eleven in the class, is the Squaw, now owned by A. T. Baker Jr., a yachtsman of Philadelphia. It is believed that Squaw will race during part of the season on the Sound.

GYM CHAMPIONSHIPS DRAW MANY ENTRIES

New York Turn Verein Is Favored to Capture Met. Senior A. A. U. Title Friday Night.

Unusual interest has been reported in the Metropolitan A. A. U.'s senior gymnastic championship tournament to be held Friday night at Prospect Hall, Brooklyn, with the result that officials in charge of the tournament have been flooded with entries, and one of the greatest gatherings ever to witness a gymnastic title test is expected.

A. A. U. officials attribute the renewed interest among competitors to the incentive of a trip to Philadelphia to represent the district in the national championships next month, but, regardless of the cause, few gymnastic title tournaments of recent years have attracted such a large number of entries. Because of the large entry it has been decided to start the competition at 7:15 P. M.

The New York Turn Verein is to make a strong bid to annex the team title from the Swiss Turn Verein, winners of the championship last year. The Norwegian Turn Society of Brooklyn, under whose auspices the tournament will be held, likewise has entered a strong squad for team honors, its leaders being Fred Berg, national champion on the long horse, and John T. Anderson, local rope climb title holder.

Curt Rottman, national champion on the horizontal bar, Adolph Zink and A. Knecht, junior title holders, and Walter Mayer, national champion on the parallel bars, constitute the foundation of a strong team which has been entered by the New York Turn Verein. With these four stars on its squad the New York Turners will enter the competition favorites to win the team title.

The New York A. C. will be represented by a team led by Ray W. Dutcher, veteran club swinger, who at one time had a veritable monopoly on this title; Charles Craemer, national side horse champion, and James Dunn, veteran tumbler, who formerly held the national title. Perley M. Clark, former U. S. Naval Academy gymnast, who was last year's intercollegiate champion on the side horse, will seek to annex this title in the district championships.

The Eagle class yachts, which are nearing completion at Benton Harbor, Mich., shipyards, are regarded as the most important recent addition to fresh water racing. The christening ceremonies at Benton Harbor will be followed by a banquet here. The date is not set pending an answer from Sir Thomas.

Motor-Paced Champion Enters 30-Mile Grind at Velodrome.

George Chapman, American motor-paced cycling champion, will have an opportunity this afternoon at the second cycling carnival of the outdoor season at the New York Velodrome to avenge the defeat he suffered last Sunday, when the season opened. The title-holder has entered for the Eddie Leonard stakes, a thirty-mile motor-paced event which features an attractive card. His rivals will be Dan Fichione, Providence cyclist, who won the inaugural feature at this distance; Vincent Madonna, Italian star, and Frank Keenan, Boston rider, who has returned to this country after a successful tour of Europe. The racing program will start at 3 o'clock.

Victor Hopkins, Davenport, Ia., rider, will strive for his second victory of the season in a ten-mile motor-paced race, which is another feature. Charley Yaeger, Frank Cozzolino and Otto Petri are in this event.

A match race in which Alex McDeath and Alf Grenda will be rivals is one of the sprinting features for professionals.

BASKETBALL RULES CHANGED SLIGHTLY

No Major Revisions and Only Three Minor Alterations Made by Joint Committee.

Three minor rule changes were made by the Joint Basketball Rules Committee of the Amateur Athletic Union, the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the Young Men's Christian Association at its annual meeting yesterday, according to The Associated Press.

Confronted with pleas from all sections of the country to refrain from making radical revisions, the rule-makers confined their activities to technical questions which will have no marked effect on the game.

The most important changes involve the rule governing "time out," as follows:

"In case of an injury to a player of the team not in possession of the ball, the whistle will be withheld until completion of the play.

"Time out for a substitution or any other purpose will not be allowed after the ball has been placed on the line for a free throw.

"Jumping centres will be permitted to stand outside the centre circle providing one foot is touching the circumference. A diameter will be drawn within the circle, parallel to the end lines, and centres must not encroach on opponent's territory on the opposite side of the line."

In the first rule change the committee defined "completion of the play" as the time when the ball passes out of bounds, goes into possession of the opposing team or after a try for a field goal.

The second change was made to discourage the practice of calling "time out" to disconcert a player in the act of shooting a foul goal.

A subcommittee was named to supervise the making of a slow-motion picture film to aid in interpreting the rules. This committee includes A. A. Dooman of Atlanta, Ga.; D. J. Kelly of Cambridge, Mass.; A. E. Metsdorf, Rochester, N. Y.; W. H. Ball, New York; Ralph Morgan, Philadelphia, and W. E. Meanwell of Madison, Wis.

All officers were re-elected and W. J. Blum of Pittsburgh was appointed A. A. U. member of the officials' committee in place of C. L. Bolster.

In the three previous games Newman-Stern won the opener played at Cleveland last week 24 to 16, but dropped the second by 26 to 21. The third match, player at Brooklyn on Friday night resulted in a victory for the champions by a score of 15 to 10, giving them three of the four games played.

Miss Kyr, right forward of the Cleveland team, excelled last night on the offense for the winners, scoring three goals from the field and one from the foul line. Miss Smith, centre for the losers led her mates in points, tossing two from the field and one from the free throw line.

The Cleveland girls, starting the game with a seven-point total lead, set a fast pace from the start, but their Canadian rivals put up a stubborn defense and at the end of the first quarter the Newman-Stern girls led by 2 to 1. The leaders increased their margin in the second quarter and at half time were in the van, 9 to 4. PENN VARSITY USING NEW POCOCK SHELL

Will Race Navy in Craft May 1 if Oarsmen Get Thoroughly Acquainted With It.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 10.—Providing the University of Pennsylvania varsity crew gets thoroughly acquainted with the new Pocock shell within the next ten days, Coach Fred Spuhn will have the men use it in the opening race against the Navy at Annapolis, May 1.

The shock shell was officially launched last Tuesday and Don Irniger, veteran stroke and his crew mates have been "setting up" the boat ever since in daily workouts on the Schuylkill. The shell has been christened George H. Frazier in honor of the Chairman of the Finance Committee of the university.

There was no vacation for the Red and Blue oarsmen over the Easter holidays. Instead of the customary late afternoon practices, Spuhn had the first three varsity eights out morning and afternoon, and Max Last, Washington's captain of last year, directed the work of several freshman crews in double drills each day.

Back of stroke Don Irniger in the first varsity are several veterans, including F. L. Gentsch, at No. 7; L. R. Doyle, No. 4; Al Nylund, No. 3; C. R. Elliott, bow. Beauveau Borie, a former St. Paul's School oarsman, who stroked the heavyweight freshman eight last year, is now rowing No. 6, with J. R. Sebastian, another member of last year's yearling crew, at No. 5, and H. J. Jordan, another freshman product, at No. 2.

MISS NILSSON CUTS OWN SWIM RECORD

Lowers National Time for 300 Yards to 4:33 1-5, but in a 50-Foot Pool.

MONTCLAIR GIRLS TRIUMPH

Beat Prudential A. A. Team by 24 to 11—Misses Hughes and Spencer Are Stars.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., April 10.—Miss Karin Nilsson of the Women's Swimming Association, national 300-yard medley champion, shattered her own American short pool record for this event in a trial against time, featured at the dual meet between the Montclair A. C. and Prudential Insurance A. A. girl swimmers in the former's 50-foot pool tonight.

Displaying splendid form, Miss Nilsson covered the distance in the striking time of 4:33 1-5, as against the listed standard of 4:47 3-5, which she established at the City A. C., New York, on Jan. 23, 1925. Unfortunately, the A. A. U. does not recognize performances achieved in pools shorter than 60 feet, so Miss Nilsson's feat cannot be granted brackets.

The dual engagement was captured by the Montclair mermaids by 24 to 11. Miss Betty Hughes and Miss Virginia Spencer were the chief contributors to the winning score, the former taking the 33 1-3-yard dash in 0:23 3-5, the latter the 66 2-3-yard sprint in 0:49 2-5, and both helping to gain victory in the 133 1-3-yard relay race in 1:33.

The summaries:

RELAY MEN TO BEGIN DRIVE

Holy Cross Runners Start Work Tomorrow for Penn Games.

WORCESTER, Mass., April 10.—With five days of the Easter vacation still remaining Coach Bart Sullivan ordered his relay men to report on Monday. The Purple track mentor is anxious to have his varsity four in top shape for the Penn relays and plans to work his men morning and afternoon for the coming week.

Clausen, the freshman, who ran indoors on the varsity four, will be missed, as he is ineligible, and this will require another new man.

The men who will return early are Captain Mulvihill, Burns, Roache, Maher and Reddington. All these men have had experience and have done some fast times during the indoor season. The remainder of the Purple track squad will start its outdoor work a week from Monday. The Purple coach expects a big season and has the makings of a well-balanced track team.

With Hood in the lightweight ranks and Al Lassman in the heavyweight ranks, New York University is facing the next boxing season with confidence. Lassman knocked out his three collegiate opponents last season in one round each. The Violet hooked out Creighton, the Metropolitan heavyweight champion, in one round at the St. John's College benefit performance

SAVAGE GIRLS WORK FOR TRACK SEASON

Stars, Including Miss Gilliland, Practice at Macomb's Park for Athletic Events.

The Savage School girls are again on the cinderpath. The track and field team of the school practiced yesterday afternoon at Macomb's Dam Park getting in readiness for the outdoor meets of the coming season. While performances of merit were turned in by the sprint stars, and also by the girls in the field events, no times, distances or heights were announced, as the plan is to let performances in actual competition rather than in practices speak for the athletes. If the 1926 teams are to keep pace with the records and marks established by previous Savage School teams they will have to travel at a high rate of speed.

However, it is at a high rate of speed that the team, especially the track division, is expected to travel, toppling records and old marks by the way side. Prominent among the girls who worked out yesterday at the Bronx athletic field was Miss Mabel Gilliland. Miss Gilliland is an all around star and is equally at home on the track or in the field events. Miss Gilliland was a star on the basketball team which recently concluded its season.

YALE'S NEW LINKS READY THIS WEEK

Students and Faculty to Attend Opening of Tompkins Memorial Course on Thursday.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 10.—Final touches are being put on the new Yale golf course by a large staff of men and it is thought that by next Thursday, the day set for the formal opening for patrons of the Ray Tompkins Memorial, founders and members, as well as the Faculty and students of the university, the course will be in pretty fair condition.

Bernard Thomson, engaged by the Golf Committee of the Athletic Association as coach of the Yale golf team and professional at the course, is greatly impressed with the lay-out. The early opening of the course has stimulated interest in golf at Yale and many students and members of the Faculty have taken out memberships. Yale has never had a course of its own and is now one of the few universities in the United States to possess its own links. That the opening of the new course will be the means of developing many fine golfers within the university is certain.

The six holes over which there is play over water in whole or in part make the course of great interest to the golfer. There are four of these so-called water holes in the first nine and two in the second nine.

There are three holes in the course with par five, the fourth, the sixteenth and the eighteenth, but these are all over the long or championship course. The regular course has one five-hole, the eighteenth, and over this course par is 69. Par for the long course is 71. Each green covers an area of about 10,000 square feet. They have been nursed for two years, until now they are in the best of condition.

The clubhouse, being built on a high knoll near the first tee is nearing completion and will provide ample accommodations for Yale's golfers. An attractive lounge room is one of the attractive features of the new club house.

COLGATE HARD AT WORK.

Lacrosse Team Has Many Veterans and Outlook Is Good.

HAMILTON, N. Y., April 10.—Colonel James Ballantine, lacrosse coach at Colgate, had a large squad of veterans and new men hard at work this week in preparation for the opening game with Cornell April 17. Most of the men of last year's squad are in training. There are some promising new men and the outlook is that the Maroon will be represented by a strong team this year.

The schedule follows:

April 17, Cornell at Ithaca; 24, St. Stephen's at Home.

May 1, Union at Schenectady; 5, Army at West Point; 14, Hobart at home; 19, Syracuse at Syracuse; 22, St. Lawrence at Canton.

U. S. SOCCER TITLE IS AT STAKE TODAY

Bethlehem and Ben Miller Elevens to Meet at Ebbets Field for National Crown.

TYPES OF ATTACK VARY

Easterners Depend on Carpet System, While St. Louis Stars Use Speed as Scoring Weapon.

This afternoon at 3 o'clock the Bethlehem Steel Football Club will meet the Ben Miller F. C. of St. Louis at Ebbets Field for the soccer championship of the United States. To the victor will go the Dewar trophy as well as the title. This cup was presented to the United States Football Association by a European sportsman and since has become emblematic of the national championship.

Both teams arrived in New York yesterday afternoon and held short practice skirmishes on the pitch at Ebbets Field. They found the ground in good condition, just fast enough to insure a snappy game and not so hard that control of the ball will prove difficult.

The Bethlehem eleven, which has won the championship four times and has been runner-up on five occasions, enters the fray this afternon as the Eastern champion. It is a member of the American Soccer League, play in which is still continuing, and has a high rating in that circuit, composed of pro elevens, although many of the players are amateurs. The Ben Millers won the national crown on one occasion and have held the St. Louis league title for the last two years. They gave the sport its real impetus in the West and their team is one of the most famous in the country.

Total of 131 Teams Entered.

A list of 131 teams entered play for the national tourney this year. The country was divided into two sections, with the understanding that the victor in each would meet in New York, which never has held an American soccer championship, for the crown. Keen competition was the rule from the start. The Bethlehem forces had to replay a tie game to gain the Eastern honors and the Ben Millers also had to play their Western rival a second time before they could come to a decision.

Today's fray, which is certain to draw the largest crowd that ever saw a soccer game in New York, will be doubly interesting from the standpoint of technique. Bethlehem, composed of players who learned the game in Europe, employs the carpet plan of attack, while the Ben Millers, having only native born experts in their lineup, use the whirlwind type of play.

In the carpet plan the ball is worked out before the ball is started on its path toward the goal. Every man has a series of advancing positions which he must assume, and on receiving the ball kicks it in a previously determined direction. The success of this system, of course, depends on the man listed to receive the ball being in his position, and also on the speed and accuracy with which the play is run off. It bewilders the opponents, who are sent scurrying in the wrong direction; but once broken up it leaves the protagonists in a very bad position. It is the style employed in the highest brand of play in Europe, and when at its best is one of the most interesting spectacles in the realm of sports.

Millers Use American Attack.

The Millers give little heed to the carpet plan. Theirs is the American attack, employed throughout the West, but brought to its highest perfection by these players. Their success depends on speed. Every man is a greyhound. They kick hard and accurately, and pass only when forced to or when a mate is in a better position than the man with the ball.

In an American Soccer League match the Brooklyn Wanderers defeated the Indiana Flooring Company by the score of 2 to 1, before a crowd of 1,500, at New York Oval. At half time honors were even, each side having scored one goal.

After ten minutes of play a long shot by Schylander slipped over Smith's shoulder into the Brooklyn net and Indiana took the lead. Open play was the order thereafter. The Wanderers launched a series of attacks, but all were nullified by the Indiana defense. One minute before the end of the half Burnett centred to Robinson, who tied the score.

Shortly after resumption of play Schylander, in a mix-up, received a cut over the eye which kept him out of the game for ten minutes. Shortly after his return Brooklyn took the lead, as Nelson scored from a mix-up. McManus and Robertson of Brooklyn were both hurt, but remained in the game.

Philadelphia Beaten by Coats.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., April 10.—The execution of the "hat trick" in the first twenty minutes of play by Billy Adam, brilliant Coats forward, featured his team's 4-to-3 victory over Philadelphia here this afternoon. The appearance was the last of the season for Philadelphia in a league contest at the Pawtucket pitch.

Casualties were numerous. Hogg of Pawtucket received a fractured wrist in a collision with Duffy of Philadelphia. The latter was removed from the game suffering from a sprain and bruise. Alexander Marshall, Philadelphia forward, suffered bruises when he ran against Captain Perry of the Threadmen. Marshall also was removed from the game.

Adam scored his "hat trick," composed of three goals, comparatively easy. The first two he tallied unassisted, while his last one came as a result of a perfect pass from Harris.

Millar, a newly acquired Coats forward, who was brought here from Scotland, escored the fourth Pawtucket tally on a pretty shot that baffled Kucklick, Philadelphia goalie.

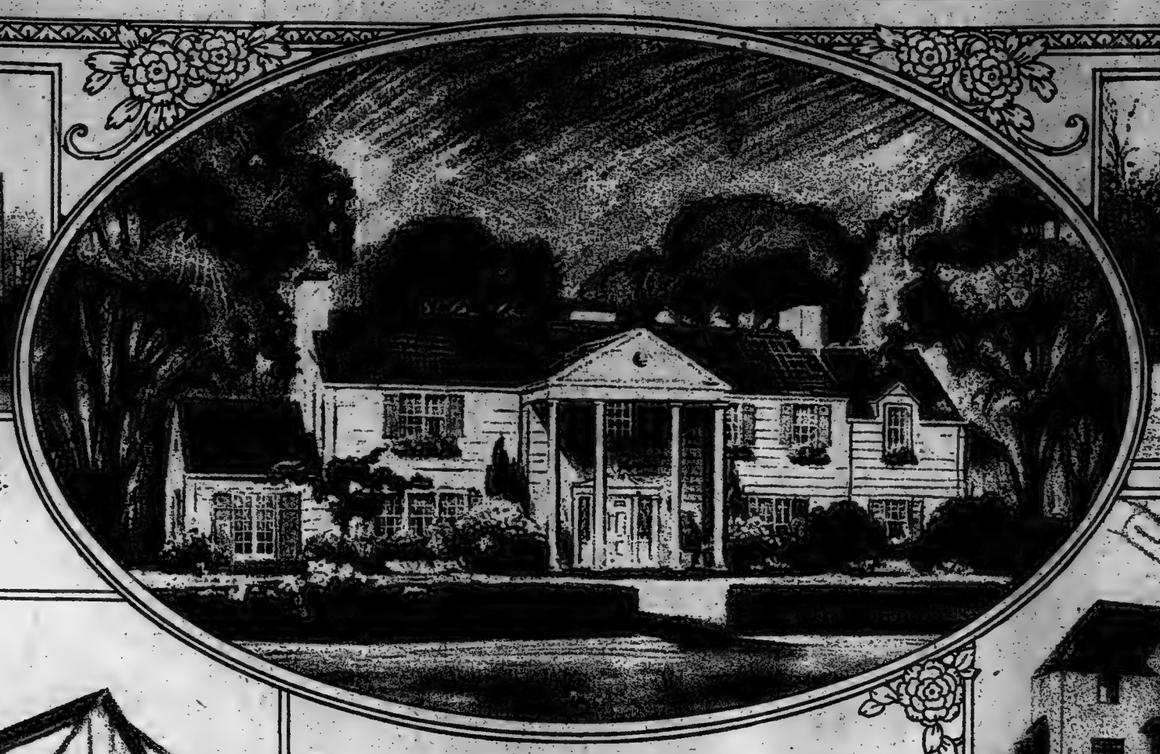
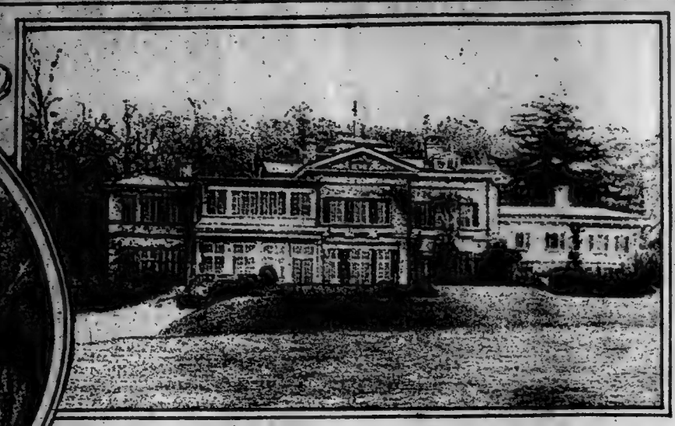
LOT AUCTIONS FEATURE REALTY BOOM IN THE SUBURBS



One of the Many New Homes Recently Constructed at Fox Meadow Estates, Scarsdale, Westchester County.



"Blythelea Estate," Llewellyn Park, East Orange, N. J., Purchased by Aldus B. Squire Through Darling & Co.

AUCTION SALES OF SUBURBAN PROPERTY

Four Important Offerings by Joseph P. Day Within the Next Three Weeks.

YONKERS SALE HEADS LIST

Following Will Come Residential and Business Sites in Bound Brook, Babylon and Deal.

Four important auction sales of waterfront and choice suburban property will be held by Joseph P. Day within the next three weeks. They include various properties at Yonkers, Bound Brook, Babylon and Deal.

The first of these sales will be on April 21 in Philipsburgh Hall, 4 Hudson Street, Yonkers, at 7:30 o'clock in the evening. It involves 165 residential plots north of and adjoining Park Hill. They front on Rockland and Van Cortlandt Park Avenues, and Knollwood Road, convenient to the business sections of Yonkers, and only a short distance from the Park Hill Station, on the Yonkers branch of the Putnam Division of the New York Central Railroad. They are suitable for improvement with homes of moderate cost.

Following this on Saturday, April 24, will come the Bound Brook (N. J.) sale, including 325 business and residential lots, with twenty-five one and two family dwellings, a business block with stores and a public garage, belonging to the Pierce estate. The Pierce family holdings practically controlled that section of Bound Brook and East Bound Brook.

The sale will be held in the Warehouse Building, Main Street, near Raritan Avenue, East Bound Brook, at 2:30 o'clock, and the owners have agreed to allow 80 per cent. of the purchase price to remain on instalment contract, payable 2 per cent. a month.

Bound Brook is a community of about 12,000 population, including Bound Brook, South Bound Brook, East Bound Brook and Martinsville. This section is the hub of Somerville, five miles west, Plainfield, seven miles northeast, and New Brunswick, eight miles southeast.

Pierce Estate Holdings.

The Pierce estate comprises a tract of approximately sixteen to eighteen acres in Middlesex Borough, bounded roughly by Raritan, Bound Brook and Green Brook Avenues and New Market Road. The tract is bisected by the tracks of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, the Lehigh Valley and Port Reading branch of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad. The property to be sold is about one-third of a mile east of the Bound Brook station and the business centre of the town.

The trolley line which connects Bound Brook with New Brunswick and Somerville operates in Main Street to a bridge over the railroad tracks, thence back to Raritan Avenue to New Brunswick.

On May 1 will come two large sales at Babylon and Deal respectively. With the recent purchase of the Babylon Yacht Club property by the Levey-Meyers syndicate and the purchase by the Babylon Yacht Club from that syndicate of a new site at the foot of Eaton Lane, in the Sequams Colony, interest attaches to Mr. Day's announcement that all the remaining portion of the Sequams Colony property extending almost from the Merrick Road to and including the waterfrontage of Great South Bay, will be sold on Saturday, May 1, at 2:30 o'clock, on the premises.

Babylon Bungalow Sites.

In addition to 475 bungalow, waterfront and home building lots, the sale includes three dwellings.

In its relation to the village of Babylon, the Sequams Colony property is located only a few minutes from the Babylon station on the electrified Montauk Division of the Long Island Road and near Babylon's shopping centre. Real estate values have been appreciably augmented there in recent years.

One instance is that of a prominent developer, who purchased a 150-acre tract at $250 an acre on a 90-day contract. The tract was disposed of twice prior to the passing of title, the last purchaser paying $1,000 an acre.

Deal Inn at Auction.

The Deal sale, also on May 1, at 2:30 o'clock, includes the famous Deal Inn, together with thirteen furnished cottages adjoining and the Horgan mansion, designed by Stanford White. In addition, Mr. Day will sell six residences near by, in Harrison Square. The sale will be held in the Deal Inn.

In addition to four sales, Mr. Day will hold a special sale of Brooklyn properties on Monday evening, April 19, in the Brooklyn Real Estate Exchange, and in the same place on Thursday evening, April 29, a sale of Brooklyn and Long Island properties, including a residence in Far Rockaway, at Mott Avenue and Point Breeze Place.

MASSAPEQUA HOMES READY FOR OCCUPANCY

Sed King Company Completes Model Home Building Program of Eleven Dwellings.

The completion of a model home-building program at Massapequa, L. I., on North Franklyn Avenue, Broadway, Parkhill and Connecticut Avenue, to meet the needs of the man of medium income in business and the professions, was announced yesterday by Robert A. Shiverick of the Sed King Construction Company.

Eleven six-room houses have been completed as individualistic homes for families who want to live within commuting distance of New York. The announcement is of interest because of the fact that this is one of the first attempts made to build homes near New York expressly for the needs of the man of moderate income. Most home-building projects have been suited to the needs of the workingman and the result has been uniformity of building rather than the artistic quality which characterizes this Massapequa enterprise.

DECORATION DAY OPENING.

New England Governors Invited to Lucerne-in-Maine.

Invitations to the official opening on Decoration Day of Lucerne-in-Maine, the $5,000,000 vacation community, will be extended to the Governors of all the New England States and to Governor Smith, it was announced yesterday by the New York office of the Lucerne-in-Maine Community Association.

The completion of the country club, in which over 500 New York families are shareholders by virtue of their ownership of Lucerne-in-Maine vacation home sites, represents an unusual achievement in building. Started in November, the club will be completed by May 15.

Lucerne-in-Maine lies on Lafayette Highway fourteen miles southeast of Bangor and thirty-five miles northwest of Bar Harbor. The development is fostered by a group of Maine bankers and business men. Vacation homes are limited to structures of the log cabin and Swiss chalet type.

AUCTION OFFERINGS.

J. R. Murphy to Sell Choice City and Suburban Properties.

Sales by auction of one, two and four family dwellings in the Bronx; the dissolution by auction of a partnership involving twenty improved Manhattan business and residence properties, and the sale of acreage tracts at Scarsdale, Yonkers, Mount Hope, Valhalla and Bronxville comprise Spring programs by James R. Murphy, Inc.

On Wednesday evening, April 21, he will sell eleven two-family houses on Fteley Avenue between East 172d and 174th Streets in the Westchester Avenue section of the East Bronx. The sale will be held at Hunts Point Palace on Southern Boulevard at 7:30 o'clock.

On April 28 he will sell at the same place twenty-two four-family houses on Leland Avenue just north of 177th Street and close to the Grant Square station of the Pelham Bay subway.

Mr. Murphy's sale on Friday, April 30, marking the dissolution of a realty partnership, includes twenty apartments, business buildings and residential properties. Among them are the structures at 309-11 East Forty-eighth Street, 88 Amsterdam Avenue, 297 Third Avenue, 418-20 East Sixth Street, 339 West Seventeenth Street, 340 West Seventeenth Street, 54 Barrow Street, 64 Amsterdam Avenue, 74 La Salle Street, 45-47 West Sixty-sixth Street, 614-616 St. Nicholas Avenue, and 64-66 La Salle Street. This sale will be in the Vesey Street salesroom.

Suburban sales for which Mr. Murphy is making preparations include 300 lots comprising Benedict Park at Scarsdale, to be sold on Saturday, May 1; lots on Tuckahoe Road west of Central Avenue, Bronxville, on May 8; 600 lots comprising the Donald farm on Saw Mill River Road, Yonkers.

Laurelton Values Rise Following Action of Supreme Court.

A recent Supreme Court decision has ordered the gas company to lay mains and give service in Laurelton, L. I., or forfeit the franchise for the territory. The mains are now being laid through this suburb. This is how Laurelton "struck gas," which immediately boosted real estate values, started business and home building projects and set things humming for the Spring.

MONTCLAIR SALES.

Buick Company Buys on Bloomfield Avenue—Other Deals.

The North Essex Buick Company purchased from a group of investors through the office of the Frank Hughes Company, in conjunction with the Arthur Collier Realty Company, the property at 217-219 Bloomfield Avenue, Montclair, a two-story brick store and apartment building, with a large garage building in the rear. The garage is under lease for a long term of years to the Buick Company. The property is located near the Lackawanna Terminal and was valued at $125,000.

The Frank Hughes Company has also sold for Walter Marvin to William Mitchell the ten-room residence on a plot 185 by 33 feet at 169 Upper Mountain Avenue on the mountainside. The purchaser intends to extenzively alter the dwelling for occupancy.

The same brokers also sold for Stuart Lindsley to Miss Alice Courtney a tract of land comprising about sixteen acres, having a frontage of about 1,000 feet on the west side of Clove Road, Little Falls, and just over the Upper Montclair boundary line. The property was bought for speculation. The same firm resold the property for Miss Courtney to a client, who has also bought it on speculation.

STATEN ISLAND BOOMING.

Spring Rush for Home Sites in Richmond Borough Under Way.

Staten Island is having another real estate boom, similar to that which touched Richmond Borough last year, according to the opinion of several prominent realty dealers of the borough, expressed to the Staten Island Chamber of Commerce.

Much of this activity is expected to follow the line of building development lots, although there is expectation, the Chamber finds, of increased activity in the sale of homes and industrial sites.

In spite of the fact that the frost is hardly out of the ground, the Spring rush of prospective purchasers has already started.

REPLOWS OLD FIELDS FOR NEW BUYERS

George W. Coughlan Creates an Active Resale Market for Realty.

AIDS THE SMALL INVESTOR

Five Million Dollars' Worth of Undeveloped Property Disposed Of in the Bronx in Six Months.

"There is every indication that the eastern section of the State of New York is due for one of the greatest booms in undeveloped land in its history. This is especially true of the metropolitan area," said George W. Coughlan, President of the firm of Coughlan & Co., Inc., real estate auctioneers, who has made an extended survey of the situation from every possible angle.

"There are good and various reasons for this statement," said Mr. Coughlan; "it is not merely an optimistic prediction, but it is backed up by facts and figures that are apparent to any one who has followed the real estate and auction market during the past few months.

"Within the past year there has been created, and largely, I believe, through our efforts, a secondary market for undeveloped property. For the past eight or ten years a vast army of small investors has been buying at private and public auction sale small parcels of land. After taking title they were confronted with the fact that once they had it they did not know what to do with it.

Had Bought for Speculation.

"Of course, if they had bought for home sites and immediate development there was no problem, but on the other hand the majority of these buyers had bought for speculation.

"They found that with their limited knowledge of the workings of real estate transactions they lacked the means of disposing of their purchases. They had put a high margin of profit on their investment and expected prospective buyers to seek them out, or they had placed their buildings in the hands of an agent, saying, 'get me so much,' with the result that the property lay dormant for years. In other words, thousands of people who had bought undeveloped property in years gone by had practically made up their minds that there was no means of disposal, and if they should sell there would be no profit in the transaction.

Continue Weekly Sales.

"Last September we started a series of weekly sales and have continued holding them every week since for people placed in this predicament. We looked the owners of this vast amount of dormant realty up and outlined to them that there were bigger fields open, but it was necessary for them to first dispose of their present holdings. We also explained that these weekly sales provided just such an outlet. By offering the property at one of the weekly auction sales and allowing the public to place the values thereon, we have demonstrated to these thousands that there is just as much opportunity for the small buyer today as there is for the large operator and investor.

"This faction have attended our weekly sales in large numbers, and it is the creation of these buyers that is going to have a tremendous affect up-

MUST PASS TEST TO GET A LICENSE

Amendment to the Law on Real Estate Brokers Effective May 1.

TAX COMMISSION IS READY

Deputy Commissioner McCaffrey Announces the New Rules and Regulations.

The Real Estate Board of New York calls attention of prospective applicants for real estate licenses to the fact that the State Tax Commission through the License Bureau, administered by Deputy Commissioner F. S. McCaffrey, is about to require the examination of applicants not heretofore licensed before licenses are issued. Through an amendment to the law licensing real estate brokers and salesmen, effective May 1, 1924, the State Tax Commission was given wide latitude to determine the fitness of applicants, the amendment reading as follows:

"In determining competency, the State Tax Commission may require proof that the applicant has a fair knowledge of the English language, a fair understanding of the general purposes and general legal effect of deeds, mortgages, land contracts of sale and leases, and a general and fair understanding of the obligations between principal and agent, as well as of the provisions of this act."

Commission Completes Plans.

It is under this authority that the State Tax Commission has now completed its arrangements. The official rules and regulations governing the issuance of licenses to real estate brokers under the licensing act (Art. 12 of the Real Property law) as formulated by the commission, are as follows:

1. On and after the first day of April, 1926, a license as a real estate broker will not be issued until the applicant has passed satisfactorily a written examination. Until further notice applicants for licenses as real estate salesmen will not be required to take a written examination.

2. A real estate broker's license issued by the commission shall be renewed without examination unless there be special circumstances which in the judgment of the commission require such an examination.

3. Written examinations will be held on the third Saturday in each month in New York, Brooklyn, Albany, Utica, Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo. After the first day of May, 1926, a written examination will be held also in New York City on the first Saturday in each month. Written examinations may be held also in one or more of the following places: Amsterdam, Auburn, Binghamton, Elmira, Glens Falls, Hornell, Jamestown, Newburgh, Plattsburg, Poughkeepsie, Watertown, White Plains and Yonkers. The commission will respect the choice of applicants to the greatest possible extent, but it reserves the right to designate the place or places where each examination will be held.

4. Each examination shall be in charge of and conducted by a person selected by the Tax Commission.

5. Questions used upon each examination shall be prepared and furnished by the Tax Commission. No other question shall be used.

6. A person will be admitted to an examination only upon presentation by him or her to the person in charge of the examination of a written permit issued by the Tax Commission or under its authority and direction.

7. Permits to be admitted to an examination will be issued to those persons only who have filed with the Tax Commission applications for licenses in satisfactory form.

8. A person will not be admitted to an examination at any place or at any time other than stated in the permit issued him or her by the Tax Commission.

9. A person, even though he has a permit to be admitted to an examination, will not be admitted thereto after the hour fixed and determined for the examination and stated in his or her permit.

World's Tallest Building.

Work on the world's tallest building has been started in Broadway, between 122d and 123d Streets, where the 65-story Christian-Missionary Building is to tower 800 feet, or 8 feet higher than the Woolworth Building. The structure, which will house a 4,500-room hotel, a church, a hospital and bank, exclusive of land value, will cost about $14,000,000.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC ENDING ITS CAREER

Famous Structure to Be Torn Down in May for Consolidated Gas Building.

SIGHTLY TOWER A FEATURE

Will Rise to Height of 425 Feet Above Street Level and Contain a Large Clock.

Announcement was made by the Consolidated Gas Company yesterday that the demolition of the old Academy of Music at Irving Place and Fourteenth Street will probably begin in May in preparation for its enlarged building. A feature of the new structure will be a tower 425 feet in height.

The new edifice, including the tower and its decorative features, will represent an expenditure of $7,500,000. That, with the present building on the southeast corner of Fifteenth Street and Irving Place, will bring the Consolidated Gas Company's investment to approximately $12,000,000.

The building when completed will be occupied exclusively by the Consolidated Gas Company of New York and its affiliated gas and electric companies, which include the New York Edison Company and the United Electric Light and Power Company. The expansion of the business has compelled the enlargement of display room and office facilities.

Tower on Academy Site.

The completed structure will occupy the entire block on the east side of Irving Place between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets, the frontage being 206.6 feet, with 204 feet on Fourteenth Street, where the easterly wall will adjoin Tammany Hall. On the Fifteenth Street side the present structure extends 297.6 feet, and has a frontage of 84 feet on Irving Place. The tower will figure prominently in the city's skyline, as its location will be such that it will be observed from nearly every part of the city, as well as from Brooklyn and Queens and Staten Island and New Jersey. The new building is designed by Warren & Wetmore. The floor area in the completed structures will approximate fifteen acres.

The building at the southeast corner of Irving Place and Fifteenth Street will be reproduced with modifications at the corner of Fourteenth Street and Irving Place, and the tower will be on that corner. The main portions of the new building will be of the same height as the present building on the Fifteenth Street end of the block, which rises eighteen stories. The tower will extend six stories above the building proper, making a height of twenty-four stories.

The tower will be surmounted by a decorative feature, and in it will be installed all necessary tanks as well as the elevator machinery and other equipment necessary at the top of a high building. There will be a clock face sixteen feet in diameter on the four sides of the tower. The clocks will form the base of the decorative feature at the pinnacle of the tower.

Elaborate Lighting Effects.

A lantern with a light of high power will be at the summit of the tower, and other modern lighting features will be so arranged as to shed a unique glow on the edifice itself. At a height of 350 feet above the curb a portion of the tower will be so arranged that visitors may be admitted and from where an extended view may be had.

The building will be of buff limestone. All window frames will be of metal; in fact, the building will represent the last word in fireproof construction.

At the Fourteenth Street corner of the building it is intended to inset in the limestone a bronze tablet calling attention to the fact that the building occupies the site of the old Academy of Music. On the tablet will be a medallion showing the original Academy of Music.

The Academy of Music was originally erected in 1854. The opening performance on Oct. 2 was "Norma," given by the Grisi and Mario company. It was a financial failure. The prices of admission ranged up to $3 for parquet seats and $40 for boxes, and only 1,500 persons were in the audience. There was a vigorous protest against what was considered excessive prices, and when Max Maretzek, the first lessee, reduced the prices by 50 per cent. the size of the audiences increased.

Patti's First Appearance.

Adelina Patti, then in her sixteenth year, made her first appearance here under Maretzek's management, on Nov. 24, 1859. On Oct. 12, 1860, the Academy was the scene of the great ball in honor of the Prince of Wales, afterward King Edward VII.

In 1866 the building was partially destroyed by fire. There was an abatement of artistic activity during the Civil War, but in the early '70s the Academy started on an even more brilliant career. Christine Nilsson rose to her greatest achievement during this period, and sang many times at the Academy.

The Academy then housed temporary opera, classical drama, comedy, melodrama and, along to the end, burlesque and motion pictures. Some of the greatest figures of the American stage have trod its boards, including Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, John McCullough, J. H. Stoddart, John Gilbert, E. H. Sothern, Julia Marlowe, Blanche Bates and, from abroad, Helena Modjeska, the elder Salvini, Mme. Janauschek and Charles Fechter.

The Garment and Fur Trade Centres Continue Their Rapid Expansion

Eighth Avenue is rapidly undergoing a process of transformation similar to that which within recent years has changed the character of Seventh Avenue from Thirty-fourth Street to Times Square from a row of archaic buildings, many of them frame construction and utilized as old clothes emporiums, to several blocks of towering modern structures which have become the homes of hundreds of firms engaged in various forms of the textile industry.

The garment centre expansion to the west, which set in about three years ago, has already attained very substantial proportions. A score or more of old structures in the area between Thirty-fourth and Forty-second Streets, including the street sections between Eighth and Ninth Avenues, are now in house wreckers' hands. Excavators are also hard at work in several places digging the deep foundations for new edifices of twenty stories or more in height to meet the insistent demands caused by the steady expansion of the garment industries.

A tour of inspection in the neighborhood mentioned shows that more than a dozen large operations are now under way or nearing completion. Enlarging this area by taking in the growing fur centre just south of Thirty-fourth Street, the number of new and recently completed structures would be more than doubled. Many of the street blocks in the upper Twenties between Seventh and Eighth Avenues have shown the effect of this fur trade expansion.

Fur Trade Expansion.

Of the half dozen or so new structures lately erected there, the largest is the fourteen-story building covering a frontage of 145 feet on the south side of Twenty-ninth Street, from 214 to 228, known as the 220 West Twenty-ninth Street Building. It was opened early in February and, according to Max Heil of Heil & Stern, is now practically 90 per cent. rented to tenants in the fur business.

One of the largest fur firms to locate in that locality was Revillon Frères, whose warehouse was erected several years ago on the southeast corner of Eighth Avenue and Thirtieth Street. Excavation is now in progress on the adjoining plot, on the street running through to Twenty-ninth Street, for a tall structure. At 236-242 West Twenty-sixth Street, between Seventh and Eight Avenues, is the recently completed Fur Capitol Building, and on the north side of Twenty-seventh Street, just east of Eighth Avenue, a fourteen-story building is nearing completion. The new Fur Merchants' Club building is at 236 West Thirtieth Street.

While the only large Eighth Avenue building now going up in this area is the twenty-story loft on the northeast corner of Twenty-sixth Street, the three large deals in that vicinity last week indicate that considerable building activity will doubtless be seen there in the near future. The large plot on the southwest corner of the avenue and Twenty-seventh Street, 100 by 137 feet, assembled last October by Isidor H. Kempner & Sons, was taken over last week by Maurice Greenstein, an operator. At the same time he acquired the opposite northwest corner plot, 75 feet on the avenue by 125 on Twenty-seventh Street, and a plot 88 feet front on the east side, between Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Streets, being 326 to 334, adjoining the new loft on the Twenty-sixth Street corner.

Three Projects This Fall.

Mr. Greenstein states that work will start next Fall on the erection on these sites of three large buildings for occupancy by firms engaged in the men's clothing industry. For the same industry A. E. Lefcourt is preparing to erect in the Fall a twenty-three-story structure on the east side of Seventh Avenue, between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Streets, and he is planning another building on the southeast corner of that avenue and Twenty-third Street, and also one on Twenty-second Street.

In the Eighth Avenue blocks north of Thirty-fourth Street, where the greatest activity is now discernible, the largest individual operation under way is the huge Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Street Arcade covering all of the easterly Eighth Avenue block front from those streets, except a fifty-foot frontage comprising the Thirty-seventh Street corner, but running around that plot with a large frontage on Thirty-seventh Street. This is one of the Frank & Frank operations, the builders having been large operators in the garment zone. It is one of the largest structures erected in that vicinity and is expected to be ready for occupancy in the Fall. Several rentals have alfeady been made and it is reported that two banking institutions are negotiating for ground floor space.

New Building Projects.

Excavation is in progress in a large plot at the southwest corner of the Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street and similar work is in progress on a fifty-foot plot at 533-535 Eighth Avenue and a connecting section on Thirty-eighth Street surrounding the southwest corner. A twenty-three-story structure will be erected there by interests represented by Shampan & Shampan and others. In the block below at 531-535 Eighth Avenue a twenty-story structure is nearing completion and at 306-310 West Thirty-seventh Street, near the avenue, an eighteen-story building is being finished. A similar structure is nearing completion at 309-313 West Thirty-sixth Street and just beyond work has been started for another tall edifice adjoining one of the Frank & Frank buildings at 327-335 West Thirty-sixth Street.

On the southeast corner of Thirty-ninth Street, with a frontage of about forty-five feet on the avenue, an eighteen-story loft is nearing completion, and adjoining, at 260-268 West Thirty-ninth Street, a similar building will soon be ready for occupancy. Two huge structures of similar size have recently been opened on the north side of Thirty-ninth Street just east of Eighth Avenue.

Before the end of the year a half dozen or more similar operations are likely to be under way in this centre.

"This garment centre area," said Max Heil, "from Broadway to Eighth Avenue, extending a little westerly in the streets and between Thirty-fifth and Thirty-ninth Streets, seems to be one of the sections in the city which, in view of the continued demand for space, does not seem to be overbuilt. Despite the number of new edifices opened there in the last two or three years, large space in virtually unobtainable and this area at the present time is practically 98 per cent. rented. Although the active renting season does not begin until Summer, there are numerous inquiries from large firms for space in the newly projected structures and the buildings ready for tenants early in the Fall will probably open with a capacity list of tenants."

LOFT NEARS COMPLETION.

Juvenile Fashion Centre Building to Open May 1.

The Juvenile Fashion Centre Building at 594 Eighth Avenue, southeast corner of Thirty-ninth Street, will be ready for occupancy May 1. The building is devoted to manufacturers of juvenile and children's clothing.

Michael E. Lipset & Co. have been appointed sole renting agents and report that they have already leased several floors to important factors in the trade, including two floor to November & Pasternak, manufacturers of children's and juniors' coats.

BUILDING CONGRESS AWARDS

Craftsmanship Certificates to Be Presented to Nine Workmen.

At the New York Academy of Medicine Building, 103d Street and Fifth Avenue, Thursday, April 15, at 11:30 A. M., the New York Building Congress will award certificates of superior craftsmanship to nine workmen.

Certificates will be presented to the following men: John Antusio, plumber; James McBurney, plumber's helper; Edward Mertle, electrician; Joseph Ackerman, electrician's helper; James Taylor, sheet metal worker; Joseph Balcrwalter, stonecutter; Thomas Porteous, stonesetter; William Netts, elevator erector, and Charles Bartels, bricklayer.

GOOD DEMAND FOR REALTY SECURITIES

New Mortgage Issues for First Quarter Show Increase Over Last Year.

Continued heavy demand has been noticed for real estate securities during the first quarter of 1926, and the volume of new flotations for that period was the largest in history, according to statistics compiled by the building construction research bureau of G. L. Miller & Co.

The total amount of new capital real estate mortgage bond issues underwritten by investment houses during January, February and March, it was estimated, aggregated $146,349,500. This repr sents a gain of about 11.8 per cent. over the same period last year. Any serious falling off in the amount of new realty issues during the next few months appears unlikely, it is stated.

"There is every indication that an expansion in the volume of bond investments is in prospect for the next ten or twelve months," states the report. "There is a noticeable tendency to sell stocks and divert to conservative investment channels much money which heretofore has been used principally in speculation.

Underwrote $90,000,000 in Bonds.

"Figures at hand show that the leading investment houses of the country during January and February underwrote real estate mortgage bond issues totaling $90,349,500, as compared with $77,185,500 in the same period in 1925. It is estimated that new flotations in March will exceed $50,000,000, as compared with $33,929,200 in March, 1925.

"While the public has been buying realty securities at the rate of about $1,000,000 a day, the flotation of other types of securities has been on the decline. In January and February the aggregate amount of public utility bonds issued totaled $326,506,000, as compared with $338,149,500 in the same period in 1925. Railroad securities dropped from $104,457,000 in 1925 for this period to $54,658,000."

Mr. Miller said that the supply of capital now available for building construction financing was probably greater than at any other time in the history of real estate development. He said, however, that the real estate bond houses realize the importance they play as a national real estate factor and no one who is true to his trust will knowingly participate in the economic blunder of overproduction or in any way jeopardize the safety of the investment of the thousands of investors in this type of security.

Banks Handle More Mortgages.

"An important recent development has been the growing realization on the part of banks, insurance companies and other institutions of the desirability of the real estate mortgage bond investments," said G. L. Miller. "The increase in the number of banks handling first mortgage bonds, either as underwriters or dealers, has been proceeding on a broader scale than is generally realized. It is estimated that more than 4,000 banks are handling real estate bonds, and indications are that this figure will be increased within a short time.

"The State Savings Banks Association of New York has just made public figures showing that on Jan. 1, 1926, the total invested in mortgage loans by the savings banks of the State was $2,339,400,578, an increase of $1,235,331,713 during the seven-year period since the war.

"Statistics announced by the Association of Life Insurance Presidents show that life insurance companies have invested in mortgages $4,217,730,000."

on the sale of undeveloped property during the coming year.

"They are anxious to have the larger holders of properties subdivide their acreage, so that they can get a part in order to turn it over for profits. In the Bronx alone within the past six months we have sold over $5,000,000 worth of undeveloped property which has been in the hands of these small investors for years.

"It has been a tremendous task to get them together, demonstrate to them that their initial purchase was not a failure, and it is with pride and pleasure that we now see at our weekly sales this anxious, keen crowd once more interesting themselves in real estate.

Commuting a Factor.

"There is still something, however, that must be impressed on this new army of buyers, and that is that they must keep within the commuting distance of New York City unless the town is of such importance as to warrant local consideration.

"Not only must it be within commuting distance of New York and a radius of about fifty miles, but it must have good local transportation facilities either by bus or street car. They should not be led on by what may be done ten or twenty years from now.

"They should bear in mind that it is necessary for them to build on the property they purchased or to re-offer it at a profit, and to do so it is necessary that the property have these main features, transportation, accessibility. These facts must be borne in mind if a fair and quick return on the investment is looked for.

"Many thousands of land buyers have learned a hard lesson within the past few years of going so far from New York to invest their money. I refer to Florida, where the 'weak sister' is not wanted, and until conditions there readjust themselves so far as a subdividing of property is concerned I would strongly recommend their going there and analyzing the situation before making any investment.

"In regard to farm land property, however, I believe that there is just as big a field today as there has been in the past years, but no matter what it is or where it is, it should be investigated very carefully before purchasing."

BIG INCREASE SHOWN IN CONSTRUCTION

March Contracts in New York State and Northern New Jersey Total $157,650,200.

50% GAIN OVER FEBRUARY

Housing Leads With a Total of $39,737,200—Contemplated Work Amounts to $239,418,800.

March construction contracts in New York State and Northern New Jersey amounted to $157,650,200.

This was a 50 per cent. increase over February and an 88 per cent. increase over March of last year, according to Dodge reports.

The month's record included $81,407,500, or 52 per cent. of all construction, for residential buildings; $39,737,200, or 25 per cent. for commercial buildings; $11,491,000, or 7 per cent. for industrial buildings; and $8,898,800, or 6 per cent. for public works and utilities projects.

New construction started in this district during the first quarter of 1926 has reached a total of $457,972,700, compared with $258,410,800 in the first quarter of 1925 and $382,150,300 in the first quarter of 1924.

Contemplated new work reported for the district in March amounted to $239,418,800, an increase of 12 per cent. over the amount reported in February and of 48 per cent. over the amount reported in March of last year.

Total construction commitments made during the first quarter of 1926 have amounted to $1,444,937,700. This is an increase of 30 per cent. over the first quarter of last year. In viewing this large increase it should be recalled that last year's boom had not really started in the first quarter, and that the first quarter of last year had only a slight increase over the corresponding period of 1924.

Over a billion dollars in contemplated construction was reported last month, the largest amount for any month on record. The exact figure was $1,029,450,500, being 20 per cent. over the amount reported in February and 30 per cent. over the amount reported in March of last year.

An Absolutely Guaranteed Development—NOT A SPECULATIVE, DOUBTFUL ADVENTURE!

[CAREFULLY PLANNED RESTRICTIONS INSURE A PERMANENT RESIDENTIAL PARK]

46 Minutes Electric Train Service to Flatbush Ave. and Penn Station.

We bought an old estate that lay in the heart of a village. It was exactly that—the HEART of the village. Not some scrubby wasteland far on the outskirts, but a cultivated park actually one and one-half blocks from the railroad station.

WE WILL SHOW YOU that the tract of land under development lies, as represented, BETWEEN the Merrick Road and the L. I. R. R. Station.

YOU WILL SEE for yourself the lovely nature of the surroundings, the pleasant village of Wantagh, the waterfront so near—so near that the cooling, salty breezes will revivify you in the hottest days of summer.

WE WILL LET you prove to yourself that you can walk from your selected homesite to the railroad station in two or three minutes.

YOU WILL SEE for yourself that the land is high and dry. You will see the streets being laid out, improvements being installed, homes being constructed.

It's Easy to Own Your Own Home

All you need is a lot and a little cash (in some cases only a lot is needed) to own one of these high grade, permanent "HONOR BILT" homes, complete with plumbing, heating and lighting equipment. In addition to shipping you all materials, we even loan you some cash to pay for labor, foundation and chimney materials.

Let us show you some of our houses that have been built in our most exclusive suburbs. They are not portable or sectional buildings, but are the better type of solidly built frame construction. The "HONOR BILT" Ready-Cut System is applying to residence construction the same principles used in the construction of modern skyscrapers. The material comes to you ready cut and fitted.

Our complete and simple instructions and plans have enabled many to build their own homes. Of 34,000 "HONOR BILT" homes 23,800 were entirely or partly built by the owners. By our Easy Payment Plan, labor you or your friends put into the home will be considered as cash. You do not need to be an experienced builder to do certain parts of the work.

Before you rent, build or buy, let us explain our liberal proposition to you. It will cost you nothing and you will be obligated in no way.

Here's What You Save

Over 34,000 "Honor Bilt" Houses Have Been Built in the U. S. A. Many have been built in New York and other cities where we have had an opportunity of comparing values of "HONOR BILT" houses with houses built in the ordinary way. In the Tabulation Below We Give You a fair comparison based on observations of our customers. Many of our customers have sold at prices that yielded as much as $5,000.00 profit.

DAD SAYS:

"I'm not only glad, but I'm proud that I Own My Own Home at TREASURELAND."

I pride myself on being able to recognize good investments when I see them, and I know, after careful investigation, that Treasureland homes are the biggest "buy" I've ever seen. The splendid location at Auburndale, right in the heart of Long Island's fastest growing section, assures me of steadily increasing value for my home, but aside from the standpoint of gain is the knowledge that I have made an investment in happiness for my family which will pay rich dividends in joy and contentment during all the years to come.

MOTHER SAYS:

"I never Knew It Was Possible to Be So Happy Until We Bought Our Home at TREASURELAND."

I feel that we are really living now for the first time since John and I married. The children play outdoors all day, and it is such a relief to know that I don't have to watch them all the time for fear they'll be run over! The neighbors are so nice, too—just the kind of people we like to have for friends, and we know their children make the right sort of playmates for our own kiddies. And last but not least is my garden of flowers. What pleasure I have had planting it and what a delight it will be when its hyacinths, daffodils, dahlias and pansies are in full bloom. I wouldn't want to live in a cooped up flat again, if it were rent free!

BROTHER BILL SAYS:

"I Wouldn't Go Back to the Old Section for Anything."

Gosh! What a difference! I never knew what I was missing until we moved out here. A fellow who has to play on the hard, stony, crowded city streets, with automobiles chargin' down at him all the time, is out of luck. It's great at Treasureland—big, open, grass-covered play spaces, away from traffic and just right for all outdoor sports.

SISTER MAY SAYS:

"Home From the Office in 25 Minutes—I've Lots of Time for Outdoor Sports."

Before we moved to Treasureland I was so tired after fighting my way home through the subway every night that I didn't feel like going out again. But now I ride home comfortably every evening on a L. I. electric train and feel so fresh and rested that I enjoy every minute of the long evenings I now have for recreation and fun. It makes me feel much better for the next day's work, too.

THE KIDDIES SAY:

"It's Great Out Here Playing Among Trees and Flowers."

Mother used to dislike us to play outdoors because she was afraid we'd get hurt in the crowded streets, but now she doesn't mind, because she knows we're safe playing on the lawn and never out of her sight. Whenever Dad wants to punish us he tells us he's going to sell our home and move back to where we came from. We surely behave when he tells us that.

FREE BUSES SUNDAY

Buses leave our N. Y. Office, 139 E. 57th St., at 11 A. M., 12 M., 2 and 3 P. M. and take you direct to Treasureland. Phone Plaza 1800 NOW and reserve your seats for one of these trips.

Yes These Are All In—

Germaine's "Printemps" in Private Park

RUSSELL GARDENS

The Garden Spot of the North Shore

GREAT NECK, LONG ISLAND

NO—not a summer resort, but a real honest-to-goodness year round place to live where you can have neighbors to be proud of, where you can become a part owner of a beautiful five acre park with its tall stately trees; flowering shrubs; shaded gravel paths; vine covered arbors; natural brooks; rustic bridges; a lily pond in the center of which stands one of Germaine's finest bronzes "Printemps"; a swimming pool of modern construction and equipment and a wading pool for children. This park has been preserved for the perpetual and exclusive use of our residents.

RUSSELL GARDENS has miles of country bridal paths; a practice polo field; tennis courts; artistically winding, tree-lined boulevards; water; gas; electric and telephone connections.

RUSSELL GARDENS is convenient to Country and Golf Clubs—amusements—water—yacht and boat clubs—motor parkways and Long Island Sound is nearby. Everything that goes toward making life worth living.

Those who know a real profitable investment are purchasing, for there is no more property to be had in that alluring residential suburb, Great Neck, at anywhere near the low prices of RUSSELL GARDENS. We purchased this property long before Long Island acreage had made such a tremendous advance, and are giving homeseekers and investors the benefit of our foresight.

And just think! RUSSELL GARDENS is only twenty-six minutes by the fast electric express trains from the Pennsylvania Station in New York City, and only five minutes walk from Great Neck Station. Could any location for a real country home so near the city be more ideal?

Visit Russell Gardens today, while you have the opportunity to purchase before the few remaining homesites are sold.

We will gladly show you the entire property without any obligation to you whatever. If you cannot call at the property today fill in the coupon and mail to our New York Office. We will gladly forward our handsomely illustrated Booklet telling you all about RUSSELL GARDENS. Or better still, call at our offices and let us tell you all about what we are doing, not going to do.

Park Hill LAUGHS AT NEW YORK!

New York is struggling to raise $235,000,000 to get improved transit. It has just begun to dig.

Park Hill HAS IT

The recently electrified Yonkers Branch of the Putnam Division of the New York Central R. R. has been in active daily operation for three months. There is a station at the foot of Park Hill and our private elevator elevates our residents to the top of the hill. Here they can see New York.

New York is struggling to adopt a bus system, the modern short haul method of transit. Some day, New York will have buses running in all directions to rapid transit stations, to big shops, theatres, hotels—perhaps. Park Hill has adopted its system for short haul jaunts to convenient places.

Write for my booklet and for my map showing the unsold plots and the names of the present residents.

Come see how convenient, how dominating and how beautiful Park Hill is. Stop in at my property office in the upper floor of the Elevator Building for information of the fifty residential plots still for private sale.

Take the Sixth or Ninth Avenue Elevated to Sedgwick Avenue station; or take the Jerome Avenue Subway train to the same station and there transfer to the Yonkers Branch of the Putnam Division. Or take a train out of the Grand Central and change at the Highbridge Station. You will ride along the banks of the Harlem River with its beautiful views of Highbridge Park, then through the lovely stretches of Van Cortlandt Park and almost before you know it, arrive at

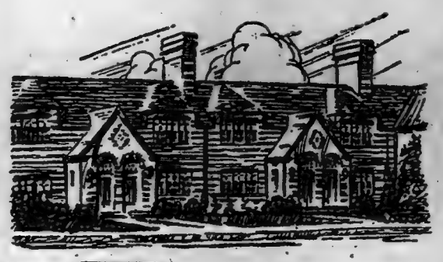
Forest Hills

No residential suburb in the country enjoys quite all the advantages of Forest Hills. Homes, quaint and picturesque, dot the rolling green countryside. A few minutes from New York, a short way from the seashore resorts, the scene of World's Championship tennis matches and a host of other outdoor sports, it is not remarkable that Forest Hills boasts the smartest all-year residences in suburban New York.



ARBOR CLOSE

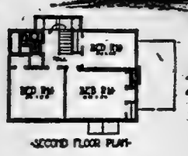
Arbor Close is a group of thirty-eight brick homes, built in the English manner about a "Close", a wide expanse of private lawns and terraces. The houses are reproductions of the cottage style, in a setting that has all the trim beauty of an English countryside. At the far end of the Close are the garages for the community, built with an eye to the architectural beauty of the whole.

Glimpses of the charming interior of an Arbor Close Home.

Thirty-two of these houses have six rooms and bath, six have eight rooms and two baths. The attractive, sunshiny dining room looks out upon the gardens of the Close. The living room, with open fire-place is very large. The kitchen, modern in every respect, has a completely furnished breakfast nook. There are three bedrooms and a well-appointed bathroom on the second floor, with two of the bedrooms looking out upon the Close. In the larger houses, a third floor contains two additional bedrooms and a bathroom. The prices range from $15,900 to $19,000. The cash requirement is 10%. An attractive booklet, with full information will be mailed upon request. If possible, visit the completely furnished model house now open.

QUALITY STREET

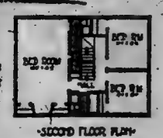
The houses in this group are authentic Colonial reproductions, carefully landscaped and built with the lovable simplicity and rugged solidity that characterized the period. Some are of brick, others broad-siding and some are shingled.



A convenient floor plan adds to the comfort of a home.

The houses are complete, ready for your occupancy. Items that are usually left to the purchaser to secure, such as gas range, copper screens, interlocking weather strips, shades, artistic electric fixtures and decorations, are included in the cost of the house. The plots are graded and abundantly planted.

Cross drafts in every room are possible with this convenient floor layout.



Sizes range from six rooms and one bath to eight rooms and three baths (brass plumbing thruout) with garage. Prices are from $20,500 to $30,000, depending upon size and location. The unusually liberal purchase plan on which these houses are sold requires only 20% cash, the balance in a first and second mortgage of equal value, the latter being amortized over a period of ten years in equal monthly installments. Many people have found these payments substantially less than the rent they were paying.

PILGRIM STREET

The inspired beauty of Tudor architecture gives to Pilgrim Street something of an air of elegant antiquity. Tudor in more than appearance are the houses that line it. Tudor in their solidity of construction, in their fine materials, in their neatly landscaped lawns.

The houses are of brick, on plots 50 x 100, containing six, seven and eight rooms with one and two baths. The most up-to-date improvements, choice accessories and beautiful decorations throughout. Prices are from $27,400 to $28,500 with garage, sold on terms that make renting an extravagance.

PILGRIM CIRCLE

Some idea of the attractiveness of Pilgrim Circle may be obtained when you realize that every house is on a corner plot, built in a sweeping circle of beautifully landscaped lawns. An arrangement of this sort brings out all the architectural beauty of these English cottage homes.

These houses are of stucco, with the ultra-modern improvements and careful layout that Cord Meyer houses are noted for. Only the finest of materials fashion them. Prices are from $25,000 to $28,000 with garage, payable 20% cash, equal first and second mortgages, the latter being reduced monthly over a period of ten years. These homes are tax exempt.

Accessible in 15 minutes by L. I. R. R. to Forest Hills station. Cord Meyer office one block north of station. 30 minutes by Queens Boulevard trolley. Comfortable parlor car busses leave B. Altman & Co., 34th Street and Madison Avenue on schedule every day. By auto over Queensboro Bridge, out Queens Boulevard to Cord Meyer office, open Sundays.

WESTCHESTER—FOR SALE OR TO LET.

When Thomas Healy went to Westchester

HE had other ideas than to find the location for that famous rendezvous that became known wherever smart people gathered, as the May-November Farm.

The magnificent property he bought from Edwin LeFevre, the author and journalist, was to become his own private estate—a delightful spot in the Westchester Hills at Hartsdale. An estate of a thousand and one beauties in its rolling landscape, its clear waterways, its splendid trees, its winding pathways that lead everywhere and nowhere and back again; its knolls from which the eye swept over miles of lovely countryside.

The decision to turn the great estate into the famous May-November Farm was a happy thought. And thousands wended their way to enjoy its hospitality and to linger and wander, and finally to go away with the wish that some day this ideally located spot would become available for private homes. And that very thing has happened and

Sunshine, Air, a Peaceful Home Nestling in Rolling Jersey Hills
40 Minutes From Times Square

Some one has said, "Don't cross the bridge until you come to it." YOU have come to the bridge. It opens up for you the road to financial independence. YOU can cross it to peace and plenty.

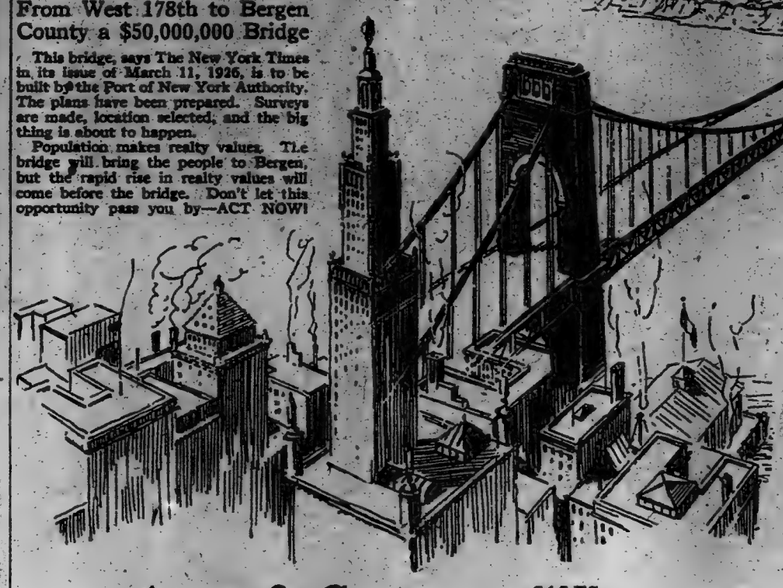
Transportation makes realty value. BRIDGES are the biggest factor in the improvement of transportation facilities. BRIDGES made Brooklyn, Bronx and Queens. The Hudson River bridge to Bergen County will be the largest BRIDGE in the world. Bergen Manor is in a direct line of the new BRIDGE.

Thousands of people say, "I could have been wealthy today if I had bought a few lots before the BRIDGE went to Brooklyn." The bridge across the Hudson will make Bergen County another Brooklyn. Remember what you could have done and do it today. A few lots in the right place may make you rich.

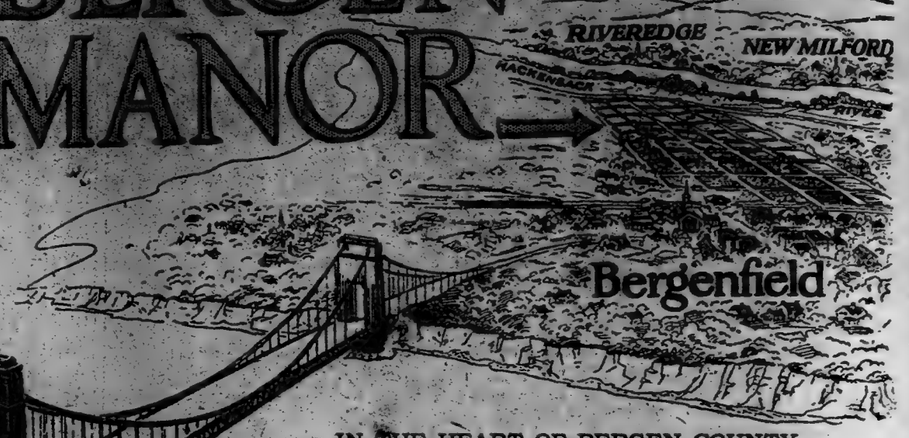
From West 178th to Bergen County a $50,000,000 Bridge

This bridge, says The New York Times in its issue of March 11, 1926, is to be built by the Port of New York Authority. The plans have been prepared. Surveys are made, location selected, and the big thing is about to happen.

Population makes realty values. The bridge will bring the people to Bergen, but the rapid rise in realty values will come before the bridge. Don't let this opportunity pass you by—ACT NOW!



BERGEN MANOR



IN THE HEART OF BERGEN COUNTY

WHERE THE BRIDGE WILL CROSS THE HUDSON

THEY SAY, "Opportunity Knocks but Once"

This theory has been exploded years ago. Opportunity knocks many times at the door of the man with vision. Most men in this world have had opportunities to make a great deal of money. Nine times out of ten these opportunities have come through real estate investments. Foresight has always been better than hindsight. The man who makes the money is the man who buys before the big things happen. The first price is always the lowest price.

Bergen Manor Has

Schools, churches, fine stores, banks, beautiful homes, and everything to make it an ideal home center.

It is four blocks from the railroad station. Sixty trains daily and only forty minutes from Times Square. A few lots here may make you rich. The payments are small, the terms are easy. Mail the coupon today.

New Jersey Real Estate

Next Sunday the Real Estate Section of The New York Times will be chiefly devoted to New Jersey real estate—comprising the territory within the New York metropolitan district.

The vast housing development that is under way, given an impetus by the proposed Hudson River bridges; the demand for small homes; activity in coast properties, will be discussed.

Those who are considering home-building this season and others who are looking for property investments will find much of interest and value in both news and advertising columns.

Advertising forms close Thursday midnight, April 15

430 EAST 57th STREET
AT SUTTON PLACE
A Group-Ownership Apartment Building

THE land on which this building is being erected is worth $100,000 more today than when the building was started. Recent sales of nearby properties make this a conservative statement.

You can share proportionately in that $100,000 appreciated value, because the prices of the apartments have not been raised.

15 EAST 49TH ST. PLAZA 9200

EAST 57TH STREET, at Sutton Place, is in the heart of a rapidly coming section—a new social center. Many of New York's most prominent people are living there now. Close to theatre, club and shopping districts, but away from traffic and noise. Values and prices are advancing by leaps and bounds.

No. 430 East 57th Street will be a 15-story apartment building and everything a high-class 1926 apartment building should be.

Purchase prices: 4 rooms, $9,800 up; 6 rooms, $16,400 up.

Maintenance only 5% as compared with 10% and more for other co-operative buildings.

An ideal place to live and a wonderful chance for a good investment.

Quieter—and Pleasanter, Naturally

The East Seventies are quiet—this is well known. And its 100 foot width makes 79th Street quieter still; and sunnier. This building adds further advantages to a fortunate location: 11 foot ceilings in the entertaining rooms and cheerfully sunny loggias with permanent southern exposure. Certainly apartments one may take pride in.

Between Park and Madison Avenues

Apartments of 5, 6 and 11 rooms. (11 room suites are one to each floor) Prices $15,000 to $47,000. Maintenance, 11%. September occupancy.

Have Your Home Where Values Are Steadily Increasing

LAND values on Upper Fifth Avenue are beginning a consistent upward trend. By next year they will be considerably higher, and apartments will have to be priced in proportion.

Only a few opportunities to buy at the present low prices are available. Prominent among them are the 6, 8 and 9 room apartments and the 11 and 12-room duplex roof garden apartments in 1170 Fifth Avenue. An investigation will convince you that they are an excellent investment. At the same time Central Park is a playground right at the front door for your children. While for you it provides a beautiful outlook.

Who can better judge values in co-operative apartments?

Maintenance charges—paid in lieu of rent and amounting to a comparatively small part of what actual rent would be for such apartments in this section—are guaranteed not to increase between now and 1932. Should present charges decrease in that period, the tenant-owners will receive the benefit of such decrease.

Large rooms with the two best exposures

The apartments of 8 rooms and 3 baths have living rooms 25' x 18'. The exposure of the apartment is both east and south, an assurance of light and air. In fact all of the masters' rooms are outside rooms, with bright sunshine and good ventilation.

Even the smaller apartments of 5 and 6 rooms have large living rooms of 25' x 16'. Facing south, as do the bedrooms. Large closets are plentiful and the construction of the building is excellent.

Despite these many advantages the rentals are moderate. Inquire about them.

BROOKLYN GROWTH IN BOROUGH HALL

Prediction That New Office Buildings Will Have Few Vacancies by May 1.

TRADE AREA INCREASING

Natural Business Expansion Will Ultimately Refill Space in the Older Structures.

Practically all the modern office buildings in the Borough Hall district of Brooklyn will be from 90 to 100 per cent. occupied by May 1, according to information gathered in a survey by the Leverich Bond and Mortgage Corporation.

The investigation was conducted along two lines: First, to learn the situation with regard to vacancies and rentals, and second, to examine the underlying causes and the support which may be expected for future growth.

It was found that buildings which have already been occupied for some time, but which are of the modern type of construction, are practically without vacancies.

Minor exceptions to the general trend were apparently caused by isolated conditions, such as dissatisfaction of tenants with rents or other features not affecting the district as a whole.

It was noted that modern buildings with established clientele, were virtually unaffected by the opening of new structures for occupancy.

Most of the buildings just finished or nearing completion are rented to 75 per cent. or more of their capacity. By May 1 managers predict that the leases will represent 90 or 95 per cent. of the available space.

Effect on Older Buildings.

A less favorable situation was found with buildings of the older type. The percentage of vacancies varied widely, depending on location, state of repair, age and other factors. Some of these buildings have held their tenants, while others have suffered. Although an exact average is impossible, a fair estimate of the present degree of occupancy is believed to be about 80 per cent.

Vacancies in this class of building may be expected to increase, as other new structures of the modern type are opened to tenants. Wholly disinterested observers, however, believe that the steady growth of Brooklyn business will soon result in the older quarters being rented again.

Taking into account the construction in progress and projected at the present time, the most pessimistic estimate is that three years will be required for business to expand to the point where the full capacity of the older buildings will be required again.

Analysis of the conditions which are causing prompt absorption of space in modern buildings as rapidly as it becomes available shows that the entry of new firms and the expansion of those already established are jointly responsible.

For a considerable time Brooklyn business has been cramped by inadequate office space. While some firms moved into less convenient neighborhoods, or older buildings, where more room could be obtained, others made the best of the limited space offered.

An agent for a centrally located twelve-story building said last week that if the building were twice as large it could be almost completely filled by the expansion of its tenants. He represents three older buildings in the Borough Hall section, which are bringing gross rentals of more than $700,000 annually.

New Business Activities.

New firms beginning operations in Brooklyn have an important part in the office space situation. Records in the County Clerk's office indicate an average of more than fifty new concerns each week. Some of these are merely reorganizations of businesses already established, and many of those which are opening in Brooklyn for the first time are of such a nature that they do not affect the office space situation.

The increase in the ranks of professional men has a more direct bearing on the matter. The number of lawyers maintaining offices in Kings County is estimated to have increased more than 50 per cent. in the last three years. The number of physicians and surgeons in Brooklyn is estimated to have increased more than 25 per cent. in the same period, while in one year the ranks of the real estate brokers have increased approximately 40 per cent.

Although it cannot be said that all this growth has an immediate bearing on the rental of offices, its effect is being felt. The Borough Hall district, most observers agree, must inevitably expand. The enlargement will follow several directions, principally from Clark to Montague Street, and south along Fulton and Willoughby Streets, where offices will be convenient both to the old Borough Hall centre and the important retail district.

BIG OSSINING SALE.

Home for Consumptives Buys 71-Acre Potter Estate.

For its new home the Hospital and House of Rest for Consumptives has purchased through Anson F. Robinson the estate of Frederick Potter, Meadow Hall, in Ossining. It is a seventy-one-acre estate which has been owned by the Potter family for thirty years. Situated about a mile north of the Ossining railroad station, the property has more than half a mile of frontage on the Hudson River, with yacht landing and riparian rights. It is bounded on the east by the Albany Post Road and on the north by the broad bay of the Croton River.

On the property is a brick house with thirty-two rooms, with conservatory.

Other buildings include a ten-room brick house, suitable for a caretaker; a frame tenant cottage of fifteen rooms; greenhouses and barns.

The House of Rest for Consumptives will move in the near future from its present location at Inwood, N. Y., to the Ossining property.

Here, you are in the golf country; half a dozen courses—the pride of Westchester and the envy of Scotland—are only a good drive and an iron shot away. And you're in the garden country; trees and flowers and shrubs surround your apartment to rest your eyes and soothe your nerves.

You are in the country—but you've brought the city with you. For these apartments have open fireplaces, cedar closets, dining alcoves, porches, elevators, individual garages and a dozen more conveniences never before combined in suburban apartments. Suites of 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 rooms, $1300 to $2600. Inspect them at Fleetwood Station, Harlem Division, New York Central; one mile south of Bronxville. Overlooking Bronx River Parkway.

How Authorities on the Vision Regard

The New York Times

New Type Dress

Following are the opinions of a few of the experts on the vision who were asked for an expression in regard to the new larger type used in the news pages of The New York Times:

 By enlarging the type you have done something that will be a great benefit to the suffering public, as the larger the type and the sharper the edge, the less the strain on the eye. **

 It will be the means of saving thousands of people from the discomfort which sometimes follows after using the eyes in reading type that is too small. **

 It cannot help but be appreciated by all, especially those who read their news under unfavorable light conditions. **

 A decided improvement. Far more legible, an important factor in the conservation of vision. Must prove an advantage to the reader in all vocations of life. **

 You should be highly commended for making such an improvement on your own initiative.  I also observe the fact that your paper is very evenly printed. A serious fault with most papers is that one side of the page is printed heavier than the other. It is evident that you are as careful with your press work as you are in the selection of type. **

 A great leap forward in the conservation of vision, as newspapers are generally read under most unfavorable conditions. **

 Those people who insist upon reading in poor illumination and moving vehicles will not damage their vision as much with this new type. **

MARKED CHANGES IN BOROUGH HALL

New $6,000,000 Municipal Building a Noteworthy Addition to the Centre.

BUSINESS NOW EXPANDING

Livingston Street Shows Revival—Urge Removal of Elevated Road on Fulton Street.

It is not surprising, says Grant Elbert Scott, Secretary of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, that a centre which is a concentration point for three subway lines representing both systems and for two elevated railroads which furnish rapid transit service to ten different parts of Brooklyn, should suddenly attract attention throughout the greater city because of unusual real estate activity. When it is added that the Borough Hall district is also served by fifteen different trolley lines and as many banks it seems surprising that the activity now under way did not occur years ago.

"To an unusual degree Borough Hall is a true community centre for the largest mass of population in New York City," adds Mr. Scott. "At Borough Hall or close by, are to be found the chief department stores, factories, newspapers, hotels, theatres and clubs of Brooklyn. Also the courts, the Municipal and Federal offices and the Postoffice are located there.

"Add to this that the neighborhood includes two of the finest private schools, the offices of the leading professional men of Brooklyn, important charitable societies and libraries, and it is evident that the centre contains all the elements for a completely rounded community life.

"The real estate activity at Borough Hall which has become so marked is but the natural expression of the need which the millions of people in Brooklyn have for the better housing of these important and growing services. The same forces have lead to an increase in the membership of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce from 2,400 to 5,600 in a few years.

The City of New York by expending $6,000,000 for a new municipal building towering fifteen stories over the old Borough Hall, is contributing greatly to the new life of this centre. Municipal offices for twenty-two departments which have been scattered over an area covering a square mile, will now all be housed in one structure.

"The public service corporations of the borough, such as the telephone company, the Brooklyn Edison Company and the Brooklyn Union Gas Company, have all built, in recent years, splendid new homes in the district. Indirectly they have done much to spread the area of real estate activity since each of them has built a little way off of the streets which for over half a century were considered the business arteries of downtown Brooklyn. Their example has lead others to follow suit. Willoughby Avenue will undoubtedly profit from the splendid buildings erected by two of the great public service corporations of the borough.

"Public improvements are often slow to make their benefits felt. But the widening, some years ago, of Livingston Street is gradually bringing about a new business artery of the first grade for downtown Brooklyn. Already Livingston Street has many high grade stores and an active business men's association. In the same way Flatbush Avenue Extension is being selected more and more as the location for buildings involving an expenditure of millions of dollars.

"Probably the primary need of the district, both from the standpoint of real estate interests and of the city as expressed by the increase of taxable values, is the removal of the Fulton Street elevated as far inland, at least, as Flatbush Avenue. It is certainly illogical for the chief business street in a community of far more than 2,000,000 people to be encumbered in a way that would not be tolerated by either Fifth Avenue or Broadway in Manhattan.

"Brooklyn is entitled to have its chief business street clear of any overhead structure. From a street traffic standpoint alone the removal of the elevated railroad by taking out the supporting pillars would help greatly at the busiest intersections, many of which being diagonal are badly encumbered.

"Hard-headed business men do not invest millions for office buildings climbing twenty-nine and thirty-five stories into the air unless there is an active and growing business that gives assurance that they will be rented. This is further evidenced by the fact that both the National City Bank of New York and the Chase National Bank have made arrangements to furnish banking facilities for the benefit of the growing business in downtown Brooklyn.

"The Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce itself is looking forward to a new building which, it is expected, will have as tenants, besides itself, such organizations as the Rotary, Kiwanis and Engineers clubs, the Brooklyn Real Estate Board, the Bar Association of Kings County and many charitable societies."

WHAT IS A REALTOR?

Chief Justice Taft's Opinion on the Subject.

"What's the difference between a 'realtor' and a 'real estate man'?"

Chief Justice William Howard Taft of the Supreme Court of the United States, who presides over the court of last resort, and makes decisions from which there is no appeal, asked that question of a village attorney recently.

James Metzenbaum, attorney for the village of Euclid, just outside the corporate limits of Cleveland, Ohio, was arguing a case involving the constitutionality of a zoning ordinance, and had been referring to "realtors" and "real estate men" when the Chief Justice leaned forward in his high-backed black leather chair and propounded the foregoing question to the startled counsel.

"I don't know," was the response. "I have been using them interchangeably to avoid using the same word twice."

"I believe we learned here the other day," Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes interposed, "that a 'realtor' charges a higher rate than a 'real-estate man.'"

Mr. Taft gave way to one of those chuckles which became nationally famous when he was President of the United States, and leaned back with the observation:

"That's about the same difference there is between a statesman and a politician."

YOU EITHER CAN, CAN'T OR DON'T KNOW.

Few successful salesmen knew in advance that they could sell.

The uncertainty and hazards they experienced are now largely eliminated.

N. L. Hoopingarner, Psychologist and Selection Specialist of New York University, is helping us to select men who will "make good" selling life insurance.

He studies your abilities. If he recommends you we may both proceed with confidence. He will tell you frankly if you are not adapted to this work. This largely eliminates the possibility that either of us will lose time or money on an unprofitable undertaking.

Most of our present men have college training or its equivalent in business experience. They were successful in other lines—banking, teaching, engineering, advertising, accountancy, &c. Their immediate commission incomes from selling insurance exceeded their expectations. They are building future renewal commission incomes which take away the terrors of loss of employment or protracted illness.

If the permanence, compensation, healthfulness or congeniality of your present position are uncertain, may I suggest that you call Room 611, 23 West 43d Street, Telephone Vanderbilt 4907, Monday and Tuesday 2-4, and Wednesday 10-6, and arrange for a special interview with Mr. Hoopingarner.

SALESMEN WANTED.

SALESMANSHIP is now regarded as the greatest profession. To be a good salesman is one of the accomplishments that is most desirable and profitable in every line of business.

SALESMANSHIP is the oldest art, trade, business, profession or whatever you want to call it.

The first record of it being in the Bible story of how the serpent sold Mother Eve an apple and how, in turn, she sold it to her husband.

This salesmanship is the greatest profession of the present day can easily be proven by one glance at any of our daily newspapers that carry help want advertisements. There YOU will find twice as many calls for salesmen as for all other help of any other kind.

REMEMBER, the fact that if there were no salesmen of any sort NINETY-FIVE per cent. of the business of the world would immediately cease and you have a true picture of the value of SALESMANSHIP to business.

The salesman is the only non-union worker who commands unlimited compensation, because no well-conducted business ever wants to lose any of its good salesmen, if it can possibly help it.

No matter how valuable other employes may be, they are never in the same class with the salesman when it comes to pay. Thousands and thousands of men have entered the selling field. Some have been a financial success; others have failed. The reason for their failure was that they were never taught scientific points of SALESMANSHIP.

It is needless for me to tell you that salesmanship is the best paid profession for the worker and the poorest for the shirker.

Our sales staff has reaped the harvest due to our foresight in procuring the best properties available on Long Island and Staten Island.

We are not just selling agents. We own—develop—and sell our own property.

If it is your ambition to become a successful salesman, regardless of what your occupation is at present, join our organization and EARN on attractive commission basis, while you LEARN.

A ten-minute interview with you will convince us whether you have INITIATIVE, JUDGMENT, CONVICTION, as one must have these fundamentals to become a SUCCESS.

Interviews will be granted daily from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. Ask for

"YES, THAT'S RIGHT."

You tell a man something that he already knows. He nods his head. He says—"Yes—that's right."

And when he says, "Yes—that's right" a tin soldier could sell him. That's so isn't it?

How many of you fellows who are considering making a change—looking for a bigger, broader opportunity have reached the point where you want to QUIT making tracks without making sales?

Do you want to find a sales connection where you can begin to talk to a man about KEEPING his money instead of trying to talk him into SPENDING it?—and yet where every day you can make a man-size commission check?

How would you like to present a plan, endorsed by the prominent National Bank of this city, whereby a man saves his money in his own account—and put on your prospect's desk a letter from the President stating that the plan you have to offer is the plan he follows himself?

It would be fine, wouldn't it, instead of the usual "I'm not interested" to see your prospect begin to nod his head and say—"Yes—that's right."

How would you like to present something which every railroad President, every great merchant and manufacturer—every man who has gotten ahead will say he believes in with his whole heart and soul because it is what has put him where he is today?

You won't find many propositions like this one! You won't find many opportunities to so quickly secure the kind of executive sales position that you are entitled to occupy.

The reason for this advertisement is because a large number of our representatives will shortly be leaving New York in charge of branch offices and we want the right calibre of men to take their places. As soon as you have qualified you, too, will be asked to take charge of a group of men and build up an organization of your own.

You can tell us all about yourself in a letter or come in to a little informal meeting which we will hold for the benefit of men who want to increase their earnings and make 1926 their BIG year.

Men of resourcefulness will find this an opportunity quite out of the ordinary—where earnings are controlled by your own energy and ambition. Limited to just a few; only those few will have a wonderful background, wholehearted cooperation and a proposition of supreme attractiveness.

Your association will be with an organization of unusual resources and prestige. Authorities say our offering to the public represents the greatest real estate development of the times. Commission basis. Concentration and the ability to apply yourself and teamwork most essential.

Salesmen Wanted.

IF YOU WEREN'T DISSATISFIED YOU WOULDN'T BE READING THIS PART OF THE PAPER.

You are reading this part of the paper because you are tired of the treadmill and want an opportunity for your talents, and we are publishing this advertisement to tell you that if you have any dissatisfaction for sale we are ready to buy it; but your dissatisfaction must be of the right quality—we don't want malcontents who are sore on the world—we want men whose dissatisfaction is born of a wholesome desire to put some real proposition over and put themselves over with it; we want men who are looking for big money, but not easy money; dozers, not drosers; workers, not shirkers; men who are both diggers and dreamers of gold; and if you've got the grit, we've got the Golconda!

The world's greatest opportunities are in the realm of SELLING; if you can put up an argument that'll induce a prospect to put up his cash YOU'RE A MADE MAN, and we have the argument that'll enable you to do it—a real estate development that bristles with opportunities for fast selling, big commissions and SATISFIED BUYERS, because don't forget that selling satisfaction is the biggest satisfaction in selling. We want conscientious business men who are interested in seeing that their clients get the goods.

Our organization, under the personal supervision and direction of Mr. Felix Isman, whose whole career has been identified with the most successful real estate developments, is now engaged in marketing one of the most important coast-city extensions in the United States, backed by big business and inspired with big ideals, assured of unlimited money for promotion and compensation, and priced for presentation, not on a "come-on" basis, but where prospects will be glad to come in!

Sales training desirable, but not necessary—we'll train you if you'll put your shoulder to the wheel—the secret of selling is having the right thing to sell—and we've got it! We've got it so surely that you can make good and make money the first week, and if only you'll cut loose with your stored-up energies and your frustrated longings for success and the money that goes with it, you can clean up and lay the foundation of an enduring financial background for the future.

Even if you're out of town, you're not out of luck, because we are interested in appointing out-of-town agencies and representatives.

Write now, or call between 10 A. M. and 5 P. M.

SPECIALTY MEN WHO ARE REAL
PRODUCERS.

Large and old established New York manufacturing corporation requires the services of two traveling specialty men of executive calibre to establish agencies and promote the sale of a fast-selling specialty in the building material line.

Our plan is entirely different from anything you have known. Not only is the product an absolute necessity in every community, but it is now at the height of the season. Under our unusual plan of operation we put you into the field only after such an intensive training that you should sell three out of every four prospects.

Your commissions average from $75 to $100 on each sale and you build up a repeat business that will insure you a growing and permanent income. We can use only those men who have heretofore earned $10,000 to $15,000 a year.

Only thoroughly high-grade men are considered—men who can satisfy our requirements as to character and clean selling methods and whose chief thought is not the size of the drawing account, but is the desire to make a permanent connection with a thoroughly reliable and growing organization.

Please do not take up our time or yours unless you are sincere and can show the necessary sales record backed with best of references. Advances against commissions can be arranged if necessary. Call for personal interview between 9:30 A. M. and 1 P. M. at Room 1416 in Manufacturers Trust Building at 1,819 Broadway—Columbus Circle. Ask for sales manager.
